Phases of the Servant-Girl Problem in the Burni Districts-Tairteen Nightmares in Every Biscuit, and Pastry Full of Love's Young Dream.

[corymann, 1991.] Methought I heard a voice say: "For, oh, there's moo-oo-oo-oo-oonlight on the In-n-n-a-ake." They talk everlastingly about the weather, in the country, and I suppose it is only natural that they should sing about it, but I personally have never shown interest enough in the subject to warrant anybody in walc ing me at midnight for the purpose of imparting information which belongs to Uncle Jerry Rusk and his signal bureau. Neither is my backyard a proper place for discussing meteorological conditions with a concertina accompaniment.

My first idea on being aroused from slumber by this unmelodious weather bulletin was that my neighbor, Sidney Drew, in a fit of mental aberration was serenading Cousin Nina. I had heard that this method of testing a young in's affection was still employed in rural districts, and on general principles I was inclined to approve. Certainly, if a man is forgiven for catawaling under a lady's window in the dead of night, he should be able at the next opportunity to approach the subject of matrimony with sustaining confidence.

I CREPT TO THE WINDOW

I grasped the first convenient missile and crept toward the window. If the midnight visitor proved to be Sydney and I inflicted serious injury upon him. I could swear the next day that I thought it was somebody else and thus restore the estente cordiale. My first glance from the window showed me that I had grievously wronged my neighbor. There was not so much moonlight in the back yard as the minstrel had led me to expect, but there was enough to show me the state of affairs. I perceived that our maid servant (called Naney by those who did not feel well enough acquainted with, her to make it Nance) was the provocation for this necturnal burst of melody and that she was enjoying it at very close range. I replaced my missile on the floor. Nancy and the midnight musiclan were sitting on too small a section of the back doorsteps to permit my taking a shot at him without endangering her; and I am too much of a gentleman to throw a No. 9 shoe at a woman. I returned to my couch and let the concert proceed.

This is only one of a series of incidents which have convinced me that the servant girl problem is even more darkly insoluble in the country than in the city. We attempted to induce our girl to come up with us from New York but she refused to go to a place which had no police force and very few social advantages of any kind. Our first country-bred servant quarreled with Maude over a question of saleratus, and went home to her mother. The next one was the eldest of eleven sisters, nine of whom had searlet fever, and as she refused to submit to such a process se of so many lives that here is where of furnigration as my wife thought necessary great boast. Our pillacure it while essary, we were forced to part with her. After she was gone, Mande burned brimstone in such quantities that I could hardly have had more of it if I had caught the fever and died of it.

Nancy was the fourth venture. was a young woman possessed of large personal attractions which she aggrarated by alarming eccentricities dress. One day she got hold of a bag in which Maude has preserved all the ribbons, artificial flowers, stuffed birds and other fashionable monstrosities which have done service on her hats for the past four or five years. Namey obtained permission to draw upon the treasury in this bag, and began to trim a broad-brimmed straw hat with the contents. She didn't stop till she had used every flower and bird and ribbon; and she were that hat to church next Sunday with utter disregard for the sacred character of the services.

Besides the young man who howled about the moonlight on the lake, Naney had another beau who played the same tune on a mouth organ. Generally they came on alternate nights, but some times one or other of them made a mistake in the date, and then we had a duet or more frequently fight. After a couple of weeks of this we decided to part with Nancy, and try to make up some of our lost sleep.

Aighest of all in Leavening Power .- U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

Maude's cooking. It is valuable discipline. If I should ever be shipwrecked and forced to drift about in a long boat with nothing to eat but marline spikes or a few fathoms of wire back-stay I should probably survive much longer than my comrades who had been ham-pered all their lives with hard tack and salt horse. When we have no girl I al-ways think of these things and read Clark Russell's sea stories.

Cousin Nina chipped in to help Maude. Her forte was fancy cooking. She had a valuable theoretical knowledge of the subject but she was diffident about ac-knowledging the practical results.

Nina had been experimenting with ples for several days, and at last she had constructed one which on the face of it answered every requirement of the cook book. I caught her gazing at it with honest pride, and I heard her ask Maude if she didn't think we might invite Sydney to ten. This meant, of course, that the pie was to be cut for Sydney's especial benefit. When a young woman begins to acknowledge a growing interest in a young man by making things for him to eat the affair takes on a serious aspect—especially for

We asked Sydney over to ten. I have previously introduced him as a polite young man; and, in any case, self-intorest would have urged him to get on the right side of Mando in order to secure her influence with Nina. He ate nine of Mande's blacuits. There were thirteen separate and distinct nightmares in every one of them. I know, for I ate two and awoits twenty-six times in a cold perspiration.

Nina's pie come last. She prepared to cut it with her own fair hands, assisted by a knife. As she laid the edge of the blade on the pastry she fixed her eyes tenderly on Sydney, and he returned the glance. I watched the knife. Nina sawed a few times with its edge, but the top crust of that ple remained unscathed. Then she tried the point, but it did not penetrate. Sidnoticed that something was the matter, and he blushed sympathetically. I tried not to eaten Maude's for a laugh at that critical moment might have sundered two young hearts

Meanwhile Nina sawed and stabbed, and stabbed and sawed, and tried to look as if these were the ordinary formalities preliminary to cutting a real nice pie. She offered a few remarks on general topics at the same time with a desire to distract attention from that mucilaginous upper crust. She asked Sydney (who sat with his back to the western window) if he had noticed what a beautiful sunset we were having. While he obligingly turned to look at it Maude passed Nina a steel knife with a good, stiff wire edge. Nina grasped it nervously and aimed so victous a stab that the pie came out of its plate altogether and struck the table with a thud that made everybody jump. But there was a gaping hole in the horny top now, and when Nina had hustled it back into its plate she succeeded in dividing it into irregular fragments, one of which she offered Sydney with the smile that tempted Adam in the garden.

I never saw anybody accept martyr dom more cheerfully than Sydney did. He ground up that ple as if it had been the bread of life—and then be asked for

"If she rejects him now," I whispered to Munde after supper, "she does not deserve to be the wife of a hero."

Sydney did not stay very late that evening, but he maintained a cheerful demeanor to the last, "Good night," said he, as we shook hands over the fence which separates our land, "whatever happens to me, don't let her think it was her fault. Tell her that I was always delicate,

He was interrupted by a desolate and mournful howl, which cleft the stillness of a Grimesville night. A minute later Nina appeared at the door, evidently in a state of extreme agitation. "Howard," said she, "won't you please come and see if you can do anything for "What's the matter with the strined pup?" I asked, trying to be cheerful.

"I—I don't know," she answered in a voice full of tears, "unless—yes; why should I attempt to conceal it? I gave him what was left of that pie." HOWARD FIELDING.

Pattison Condemned by the Press of Pennsylvania.

NO EXTRA SESSION NECESSARY.

Keystone State Editors Agree in Finding the Governor's Action Due Entirely to His Ambition to Help Along His Presidential Boom.

With one accord the newspaper press of Pennsylvania, except where biased Some people say that the rabbit ercp by Democratic partisanship, promptly will be big this year. characterized the hasty action of Governor Pattison in calling the senate in extra session as a political campaign So good for a baby suffering with Wind extra session as a political campaign Coll: as Dr. Hand's Colle Cure. He is now playing for political effect, and the prevailing impression is that he will soon discover the great blunder he has made. Public sentiment has already set in strongly against him.

Here are some press comments: Mr. Pattison's Boomerang.

The proclamation of Governor Pattison is already developing the symptoms of a boomerang through the state. The call of the extra session of the senate has so many marks of rank partisanship about it that it is little wonder that the governor is charged with furthering his own designs upon the presidency. It is absolutely necessary that the state should go Democratic to make the governor a hoperui candidate before ine Democratic convention, and to secure this result every Democratic expedient must be every Democratic expedient must be employed.

The governor refused, to go into court with his charges against the anditor general. He refused to takes the constitutional rourse and summon the legislature to impeach. He preferred to restrict the inquiry to the narrowest limits, and therefore took a course which a of acutatrul legality. He chose to become the presenter in a campaign address stuffed with expressions for rowed from the "arraign and condemn" resolutions of Mr. Harrity's convention. He believed that the people would be satisfied to listen to a campaign address by his attorney general delivered to the seantors in a nail bired for campaign purposes at an expense of $40,000. If the call was not intended for partisan purposes way summon the seante at a time so near the election that a careful examination could not be mader. Why did let not rive notice that he would summon the legislature the day after election, thus making it apparent that the negative was to be constituted for partisan pour power of the day after election, thus making it apparent that the negative was to be constituted. tion, thus making it apparent that the inquiry was to be conducted upon a fair and genuine basis, and not to be subjected, in the midst of a campaign, to the charges of partisanship which are now heard upon every side. The more the case is looked at the plainer becomes the conviction that the governor is playing a very sharp trick, with the presidency as the objective point.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Simply a Useless Expense. The calling of the senate at this time is so evidently for political buncombe that it will fail of its intended effect. It is simply meant to attract public attention to the matter, and keep it awake until after the election. The senate cannot impeach any officer. The concamot impeach any officer. The constitution vests that power solely in the house of representatives. The house must prosecule; the samtle is the court that sits upon the case. There is no in re-propriety in having the sonste conduct a preliminary investigation of its own accord than there would be in a juror investigating the facts of a cause before going into the box to pass judgment upon it.—Pittsburg Times.

A Political Dodge.

As there is already a committee of the legislature in existence investigating the conduct of these officials, and coming as it does just on the evo of the state election, this proclamation looks siace electron, this proclamation roots like a sharp political dodge to make capital for his party. It must not be forgotten that all the developments thus far brought out in the Bardsley matter and the state officials has been the work of a Republican district attorney, and now at this late hour, a moment before the state election, the tardy governmor moves and calls an extra session of the senate.—York Dispatch.

Governor Pattison has called an extra session of the senate for political purposes only. In doing so he has not surprised anybody who has kept watch on the administration since it entered into pessession of the highest offices of the state last January. It has been a political administration from the outset, and every one of its actions has been a means to an end, and that end the political advancement of Governor Patrison. The governor is playing a sky rocket game.—Harrisburg Telegraph.

A Cheap Variety Show.

The extra session will full in every-thing except great expease to the taxpayers. It is the price they pay, how ever, for putting into the executive chair a man who is playing the state for chair a man who is playing the state for presidential stakes; for voting into power a party that has no principles which can win voters and must play for political capital of a cheap variety in the hope of winning support from those who are too apt to be caught by such claptrap.—Easton Free Press.
