

A SURPRISED WIFE

Mrs. Yorke Astounded When Told She Was Divorced.

THE HUSBAND AGAIN MARRIED.

How Capt. Yorks, Ex-Assistant U.S. Navy Paymaster, Got Rid of His Wife.

The Complaint Published in an Obscure Dakota Paper Is Alleges Unfaithfulness, Which Charge Is Indignantly Denied by Mrs. Yorke--The Captain Married the Widow of a Russian Count--The Divorce to be Contested.

SEA GIRT, N. J., Oct. 22.—The report that a divorce had been granted by the Dakota courts to Captain Lewis A. Yorke created intense surprise here, where Mrs. Yorke has a handsome summer cottage, and is well known. She was the most astonished person of all, for she was not aware that her husband was seeking a divorce.

About a week ago Captain Yorks, who for 30 years has been Assistant Paymaster of the United States Navy, was married at Bismarck, N. D., to Evelyn, Countess Desolinskaya of Russia. The Countess had lived for several months at Bismarck, N. D., and met Captain Yorks at Bismarck by appointment.

The Fargo divorce records show that a decree of separation was granted to Captain Yorks on September 16. The papers prove that an affidavit was made that Mrs. Evelyn Yorks could not be found in this country.

The summons was published in an obscure weekly paper in Fargo. The complainant charges her with improper intimacy with E. Desplerville, Vice.

The charges made by the ex-Paymaster that his wife was intimate with E. Desplerville Vice Mrs. Yorks characterizes as false and slanderous. Mr. Vice has for years been a friend of Mrs. Yorks' family, who are well-known in Pennsylvania, and have a beautiful country seat at Bryn Mawr.

Mrs. Yorks avers that this charge made by her husband that she had been in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Florida with Vice are entirely and maliciously false. She has employed George Northrop, a prominent Philadelphia lawyer, who has known her since childhood, to file proceedings against the ex-Paymaster to have his alleged divorce declared fraudulent.

Mrs. Yorks declares that the alleged new wife of Capt. Yorks is not the widow of a Russian count, as she claims, but is still the legal wife of a subordinate officer in the United States Army. Mrs. Yorks says that she has met the alleged countess and knows all about her.

The friends of Mrs. Yorks' family say that her husband's conduct caused the separation of the couple two years ago. After the separation the Captain went West and secured the divorce, which is claimed to be bogus.

Mrs. Yorks' family say that when the suit being now instituted by her comes into court her good character will be proven beyond question, and both Captain Yorks' so-called divorce and second marriage will be shown to be illegal.

THE MISSING LAWYER.
Monaghan's Whereabouts Still a Mystery
—The Insurance on His Life.

WEST CHESTER, Pa., Oct. 22.—There is still no clue to the whereabouts of Lawyer R. Jones Monaghan, who left his home here several weeks ago for New York, where he mysteriously disappeared.

No claim has been made upon the insurance companies by his family for the insurance on his life, and probably none will be, unless positive proof of Monaghan's death is found. The family can not receive the $22,000 insurance on his life for seven years unless his death is proven before that.

The law of Pennsylvania provides that when a man whose life is insured disappears, no claim for the insurance money can be made for seven years, and that during that time the premiums on the policy must be kept up. If, however, the premiums so paid are returned with the principal.

No reason can be assigned for Monaghan's disappearance, but that he at one time contemplated leaving this State is shown by the fact that in May, 1883, he wrote the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, stating that his health was failing; that he was offered a position with a mining company at Tucson, Arizona, and with the consent of the company, he would accept it. Monaghan's idea at the time was that his removal would affect his life insurance.

THAT FAIRY STORY

Editor Carter Comes Up to Annihilate It.

SAM AND EVA ON NETTLES.

They Are Visibly Agitated When Confronted by Their Nemesis.

Mr. Carter Couldn't Stand the White-washing Given Thornton and Miss Jewell by the Mount Olivet Church, and He Is Going to Vindicate Himself--He Has an Affidavit from the Car Conductor Who Saw the Fair.

New York, Oct. 22.—W. R. Carter, of the Jacksonville, Fla., "Metropolis," arrived in this city yesterday on the steamer Algonquin.

When Samuel N. Thornton and Eva Jewell, of Brooklyn, arrived in Jacksonville and told the thrilling story of their big drift and subsequent rescue and landing upon Florida shores, Mr. Carter was sent to interview them. Mr. Carter announced that Sam and Eva were romancing, and brought proof to show that he traveled with them in a railroad car from Pensacola to Milton, a tiny way station between Pensacola and Jacksonville.

Sam and Eva vigorously denied Mr. Carter's story. They said that it was a case of mistaken identity. When they arrived at their Brooklyn home the deacons of Mount Olivet Church, to which they belong, sent an emissary to Jacksonville to investigate Mr. Carter's story. It resulted in the vindication of Sam and Eva.

Mr. Carter now comes to prove to Sam and Eva's fellow church members that his story is true.

"When I called at the St. John's Hotel," said Mr. Carter yesterday, "and sent up my card, Thornton was not in. Eva stepped out into the parlor to see me. The moment I saw her I recognized her. In fact the recognition was mutual. She uttered an exclamation, became ashy white, and, with a gasp, fell into a chair. For a moment she could not speak. She simply held her hands over her face.

"This is a remarkable story you and Mr. Thornton tell," I said: "You are the same woman that came with me from Pensacola to Milton."

"Eva became indignant, and refused to say a word. She then left me hurriedly. I then looked up Thornton and identified him at once. His manner, too, indicated that he recognized me."

"After the couple arrived home a gentleman from their church came down to investigate their story. We gave him all the information we had. I personally told him how impossible was their story."

I obtained for him a sworn affidavit from the car conductor, who also identified Sam and Eva as the same who had traveled in his car, and he left convinced, we thought, that Sam and Eva were lying.

My surprise when he returned cast doubt upon my story, and had the church vindicate the man and woman.

This placed me in an embarrassing position. I was urged to come here to expose the whitewashed vindication. I propose to do so."

Mr. Carter is a guest at the Hotel Marlborough. He will communicate to-day with the authorities of Sam and Eva's church.
