Before Stanley left Dr. Park and me he made an arrangement with the Arab chiefs, for a stipulated price, to furnish my party with food during his absence. They never kept their word. As soon as Sianley was gone they refused to give us the food, and the supply thus cut off, we were in deplorable straits. They stole things whenever they could, and it was to them the bearers, who deserted the expedition with their burdens of ammunition and rides, went to sell those supplies. By and by, as things got worse, and ulnerations appeared on my feet, it was determined to leave me with the sick men of the party and to push on more rapidly. They could not, of course, take me with them. They had no means for doing so, in times like that no one man must be considered.
