HE MAY RISE AGAIN

Is Gillig to Re-establish the American Exchange?

SO SAY REPORTS FROM LONDON.

The Once Prominent Financier Now Running a Drug Store in Brooklyn.

He Made a Trip Abroad Recently and It is Said Negotiated for a Lease of the Victoria Hotel, London—At one Time Proprietor of a Bank With Branches All Over the World.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—A retired United States naval officer recently returned from London brings the rumor, interesting whether true or not, that Henry F. Gillig is seen to start another American Exchange, more gorgeous than the first, in the world's metropolises.

While this story is going the rounds of the clubs and the American colony in London, ex-Banker and ex-American Exchange Proprietor Gillig is busily compounding prescriptions in an apothecary's shop in Brooklyn.

Few people have had any idea what had become of Gillig of late years, and still fewer know that he was in this part of the world. For some time past Gillig has been living in Brookville, and the drug store in Brooklyn, of which he is proprietor, is at number 197 Bedford avenue, on the corner of North Sixth street. The painted sign on the drug store reads: "Otto Gillig, Druggist." Otto Gillig is Henry Gillig's brother, and he is now in Brookville Asylum, suffering, it is said, from softening of the brain, or some similar trouble. This sad affliction of his brother has given the ex-financier a chance to keep busy in these, his days of obscurity, after the worldwide fame that was his in the palmy days when the American tourist found branches of the American Exchange Bank at almost every stop-over station on the globe.

Travelers have not yet forgotten the luxuriant magnificence of the Exchange. The first floor of the London Exchange, after Gillig bought out the previous owners, was turned into the banking room, and the circular apartment was fitted up as though millions were behind the counter. On the next floor above was the reading room; on the third floor were the tourists' writing and consultation rooms, and still above that was Proprietor Gillig's force of clerks. His entertainment was too lavish for Gillig to bestow upon a distinguished American. Henry Ward Beecher was given a reception that made London gasp in astonishment. Suppers and theater parties were common things, on the Fourth of July patriotic banquets, and all was for the entertainment of American travelers, and added additional lustre to the fame of the host Gillig. The home of the Paris branch of the Exchange was more gorgeous than that of London, and in all the cities the institution was conducted on the same principles. Senator Hawley and other American capitalists had allowed their names to be used in connection with the enterprises.

Then came the gathering of the clouds and the bursting of the storm. Its effects were far-reaching and affected many, both in London and America, and when the storm cleared away nothing remained of the American Exchange and its multitudinous branches but vacant rooms and signs which read: "To Let."

Gillig tumbled from the pinnacle, down, down, until now he is looking after the finances and other affairs of the Brooklyn drug store, which, almost has no branches in Bombay, Hong Kong or Tokio.

But is the American Exchange to rise again, Phoenix-like, out of the Brooklyn drug store? That is what they are saying in London, though some laugh long and loud at the suggestion. Why, then, did ex-Banker Gillig quietly go over to London last summer and come quietly home again about Sept. 1?

Soon after Gillig came back to the Brooklyn drug store from London, stories began to float around the English city that he was arranging to lease the Victoria Hotel at £90,000 a year, as an American hotel and Exchange. Another report was that he was about to engage a suite of rooms for the same purpose. Americans over there seem to ask one another: "Are the old glories to be revived?" The very memory of Gillig's bouzouki repeats caused lips to smack and tongues to moisten. Gillig himself gives no sign, either to prove or deny the stories.

People who know, either from experience or report, of his wonderful persuasive powers, are wondering whether he will really get on his feet again, and once more come within the focus of the public eye, as he was in the days when he was proprietor of a bank with branches all over the world, owned the Grand Hotel in Liverpool, and banked Lawrence Barrett, Jack Haverly and Salvini, as side investments.

DIED WHILE WRITING

Lord Lytton's Death Came Without Warning.

ONLY A SERVANT WITH HIM.

Suddenly Relaxed His Hold on the Pen and Sank Back Lifeless.

His Death Attributed to the Defective Sanitary Condition of the British Embassy—Letters of Condolence from Many Courts—He was One of the Most Widely Known of European Diplomats—To Be Interred at Knocknorr.

PARIS, Nov. 26.—It has been practically decided that the remains of the late Earl of Lytton, the British Ambassador to France, will be interred at Knocknorr, Hereford, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. At the request of the dead post-diplomat no flowers are to be placed on the coffin and in all respects the funeral will be of the most simple description.

There is no doubt, the friends of the deceased man say, that the Earl's death was due, directly or indirectly, to the defective sanitary condition of the British Embassy.

The British Ambassador had been complaining for some time past of not feeling well, and Tuesday he was confined to his bed. It was not thought, however, that his sickness was of a serious nature. He was writing verses in bed.

At about half past three on the 26th, the servants who were putting the Earl's bedroom in order, suddenly heard his master breathe heavily and give a deep sigh, as the pencil in his hand dropped to the floor, and the Earl sank lifeless upon his pillow.

The Countess of Lytton, the wife of the deceased Earl, was hastily summoned and reached the deathbed at about quarter past four, only to find that there was no doubt that her husband was dead.

The pencil and the paper upon which the unfinished verses were jotted down are to be treasured among the deceased's most precious belongings and will undoubtedly prove, for many years, a sacred relic in the Lytton family.

Several physicians were hastily summoned to the British Embassy soon after the servant, who was in the Earl's room at the time of his death, had given the alarm, but all their efforts failed to restore him to consciousness. Heart failure brought on by malaria and other troubles of a similar nature are said to be the cause of the Earl's demise.

From the moment the Earl of Lytton's death became known there was a continued storm of visitors calling at the British Embassy.

President Carnot sent one of the officers of his household with a message of condolence to the widow, M. de Freycinet called in person, M. Ribot did the same and all the representatives of foreign countries in this city have sent messages of sympathy to the family of the deceased diplomat, who was most popular in all circles.

From the Queen of England, the Prince of Wales, Lord Salisbury, Mr. Gladstone and many hundreds of other distinguished people in England, from Emperors and Kings, Princesses and Princesses all over Europe, messages expressing regret at the death of the Earl of Lytton, were received at the Embassy here.

The dead Earl, during the course of his long and brilliant diplomatic career, having been attached, in some capacity, to nearly all the British Legations in Europe, and as he was hoarse of friends everywhere, some idea can be formed of the multitude of telegrams pouring in upon his family.

"FRENCH COLONEL" SENTENCED. To Serve Twenty Years in Prison on One Charge and Seven on Another. LONDON, Nov. 26.—The man known as Le Grand, Charles Grand, Captain Anderson, the French Colonel and other names, supposed to be a well known American crook, who was recently convicted of sending blackmailing letters to Lady Jessel and other ladies, and who was convicted Tuesday of forging checks upon the London and Westminster banks, was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment with hard labor for the blackmailing portion of his offenses.

In addition, for the forgeries upon the London and Westminster Bank, the "French Colonel" was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment with hard labor.

There are a number of other and similar charges against the "French Colonel" but it is not thought that they will be pressed in view of the present sentences.

Niagara to Run the Falls. CHICAGO, Nov. 26.—The scheme to transmit electric power from Niagara Falls to operate the electrical exhibits at the World's Fair is now thought to be a "go." It is proposed to divert water from Niagara by a canal and drop it 110 feet. By this means 120,000 horse power can be furnished. The distance from here to Niagara is 475 miles. The estimated cost of the power delivered here is $50 per horse power.

pure alcohol to make Wolff's Acme Blacking. Alcohol is good for leather; it is good for the skin. Alcohol is the chief ingredient of Cologne, Florida Water, and Bay Rum the well known face washers. We think there is nothing too costly to use in a good leather preservative.

Acme Blacking retails at 20c, and at that price sells readily. We want to meet them with cheapness if we can, and to accomplish this we offer a reward of
