SOLDIERS' BOUNTIES. Those unfriendly to the veterans numbers. and their pensions continually prate hout the big bounties received by them during the war. The National Tribune pays attention to those croakers by saying it is singular that if the big bounties of 1864 were so tempting as soldier-haters now claim they were, that no more men availed themselves of them. There were a million or more young men in the country in 1864 to whom the bounties were no temptation, because they could make more money at home. Even a bounty of $1,000 in depreciated paper money was a small inducement for a man to leave his home and encounter the awful perils of war. It represented only about $350 gold value, and . it was not difficult for a young man who had the stuff in him for a soldier

do make $1,000 at home in 1864, when

To hear the soldier-haters prate one would think that the volunteers were plastered over with greenbacks to indee them to enlist. The truth is that t least three-fourths of the volunteers received no bounty at all, except the small one given by the government, and only allowed after two years' continuous service. In many of the tates the bounties were insignificant. thode Island, for example, sent out ,699 men, and only paid them $820,-9 in bounties which would make an verage of a little over $39 per man. ansas sent 20,151, and only paid 7,407 in bounties—not quite $3 apiece. is very easy to show that love of oney played no part whatever in llying around the flag the men who ved the Nation from destruction.
