COULD CHILI WHIP US?

Secretary Tracy Thinks Her Navy Could Outfight Us.

Mr. Tracy Talks with Julian Hawthorns About the New Navy-What Chili Would Do in Case of War-The Defenseless Pacific Coast.

(COPYRIGHT, 1892.) The office of the secretary of the unvy is up one flight of stairs, on the east side of the enormous pile of masonry that contains, not that department only, but the departments of state. of the army, and (I believe) of the in-terior. In the long and wide marble corridor that communicates with the rooms of the secretary are models, in glass cases of the typical ships of the navy, each finished with every detail, and from three to four feet in length The door of the office is open and a subordinate door of slats, with space above and below, and without a latch, swings open to admit you. You enter a large, handsome room, with broad windows looking out on the white bouse, and on the rising sun. There are two or three desk tables, at one of which sits an alert man of middle age, of medium height, and sturdily built. He is Mr. Raymond, the secretary's private secretary, and a very cheerful, able, agreeable man he is. I sat chatting with him a few minutes, while awaiting my summous to the interior room occupied by the secretary himself. On chairs and sofas sat half a dozen gentlemen, also waiting for something.

A bell sounded, and Mr. Raymond said: "I think that is for you." I got up, followed a beckening hand, and in a moment found myself alone with Mr. Tracy. The room was simply furnished, and round the walls were colored portraits of our new cruisers and line-of-battle ships. Mr. Tracy is a massive, powerful man of about sixty, with close out white hair and beard, a strong nose, gray eyes and a chin as firm as the prow of one of his own ironelads. Withal his aspect is diately assured of a strong, resolute, wise character, fully adequate to any duty that might be imposed upon him. His forehead is high and clear, and his eyebrows are somewhat inclined to overhang his eyes. I could easily have taken him for an admiral, who had weathered a thousand gules and a hundred fights.

About the first thing he said, however, showed how much I would have been mistaken in my surmise. "I didn't know a thing about the duties of the office when I first came here," he said. "I've made them a study. My profession has accustomed me to get my subjects, and to amass and systematize information. One is obliged to learn how to do that in the law. It was not long before I got knowledge enough of the nature of my duties to be able to attend

"The principal subject of your study was ships, I suppose?"

"The designing and building of ships, their armament and management, are the substance of what I have to look after. Matters of minor detail are left in a measure to my subordinates, but the direction of everything belongs to the very next day after the bill for the me, and the greater their importance, construction of the battle ships and the the more entirely, of course, are they my business. Cruiser No. 12, for instance, was built according to my ideas. I don't mean that I drew the plans."

"The work of building these ships seems slow to an outsider. Is there no means of hurrying it-for instance, by distributing the work to a number of firms, instead of giving it all to one?"

for us to turn them out faster than we in getting the armor. The Bethlehem company has just begun to deliver the armor, at the rate of 300 tons per We also have a contract with Carmegie & Co. to deliver 500 tons a That is more than is delivered by firms abroad."

"Is the quality of our armor as good as that in England or elsewhere?" "It is better-it is the best up to date It is an alloy of nickel and steel, which does not crack it receives the shot, and seems to become homogeneous with it, like a snowbail thrown into a snow bank. It is a recent invention, and, from that point of view, it is fortunate that we were delayed so long in getting our armor. If it had been delivered two years ago, as we expected, it would have been now out of date. As it is, our armored cruisers and line-of-battle ships will be the best of their kind in the world." "But until they are complete-?" "Until they are complete, we are Highest of all in Leavening Power .- Latest U. S. Gov't Report.

"Then if Chili-"You may say this," said the secretary slowly, emphasizing his words: 'If you are going to write about the matter, you may say this: Four months from the time those sailors were killed at Valparaiso, Chili, if we had declared war, would have had our Pacific coast entirely at her mercy. With the ships she has, together with those that will be ready shortly she could have done anything she pleased with us. It has been her ambition to be mistress of the

This was not a pleasant contingency to contemplate. I suggested that we could thrush them if we caught them on shore. Mr. Tracy laughed grimly, and intimated that they would probably decline to come ashore for the purpose They could secure all they wanted without disembarking.

"And we must continue to be defenders for several years at least?"

"Yes; all that can be said is, we are now going ahead as fast as possible. But even now there is this drawback that there is no absolute security there. The next congress will vote to carry on Give her Dr. Hand Cone Care. It is the work begun by this or by a previous one. This makes many firms timid about undertaking contracts. They might go to a great expense and get one then be left stranded."

"What is the character of our navy?" I inquired.

The men who man our ships are very intelligent; they adapt themselves readily to altered circumstances. A battle ship now is an entirely different thing from what it was some years ago. All the sailing business-the going aloft, taking in and making sail and all that -is of course done away with. The work of the man is below. There are about thirty distinct machines aboard one of our modern men-of-war; the machines for iccomotion, for moving the anchors, the electrical machines and many others. In spite of the complete change in the nature of the duties aboard ship, we have had no accidents The English, on the contrary, are hav-ing accidents and making mistakes all the time. Our men are more intelligent, careful and efficient."

"In case of war, how many seemen

"Why, very few; only enough to make a nucleus for an effective force. But quite Intely something has been done towards forming a naval militia at various points along the coast, qualified to be available in case of emergency. Organizations have been established at Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Carolina, Georgia, Texas and California"-I am not sure that other states were not included-"and the department sends officers and provides ships for their periodical drilling and instruction. They have been practiced in firing guns, and in firing them at targets, which is about the most important thing they can learn to do. They have done very well. They cost little or nothing, and are liable at any mo-ment to become of the greatest practi-

We have been rather slow in beginning, perhaps, but now that we have begun, we are losing no time. On construction of the battle ships and the armored cruisers became a law, they were advertised, and the bids were received three months later. Of course, the drawings had already been prepared, counting on the probability of the bill passing; so that no delay occurred. If, now, congress makes the appropriations for the construction, as they fall due, we shall be making ex-"No," said the secretary, shaking cellent progress. But there is no use his bead. "It would not be possible in disguising the fact that we are not his bead. "It would not be possible for us to turn them out faster than we are now doing. The works at Bethlehem, after a delay of four years, are now working at a rate more rapid than is the case at the foreign ship yards. Their plant is now perfected, after many difficulties and disappointments, and at an immense cost. Very few firms in the country can afford to put so much capital into a plant and let it remain unproductive so long. There would be no gain in cheapness or promptness were the work done by the government—and the government, of course, has not the plant. A firm which gets a contract to other firms, at its own risk and expense. The delay has been, not in the construction of the vessels, but in getting the armor. The Betthehem company has just begun to deliver the ready to defend ourselves if attacked continue to be so."

I left the secretary of the navy with the conviction that the office was in good hands. Mr. Tracy is blind to no good hands. Mr. Tracy is blind to no dangers, but neither does be exaggerate them, nor is he unnerved by them. He knows what should be done, and how to do it, and is taking the best means to accomplish his purposes. He has the confidence of his subordinates; and, whether war comes roon, or late, or not at all, he will deserve the gratitude of the American people
