A Stowaway's Nine Days of Fearful Torture.

NOT EXPECTED TO RECOVER.

Not Even Room in the Hold of the Ship to Stand Up.

Charles Burzell Went to Sleep in the Et Monte at New Orleans-Lifted Out at New York a More Shadow-Chewed the Leather Sweat Band of His Hat for Food, and for Water Licked the Moisture from the Iron Sides of the Vessel,

NEW YORK, Feb. 11 .- It is doubtful if any one experienced nine more fearful days of torture than handsome, well educated, well connected Charles Burzelle has just gone through The doctors at St. Vincent's Hospital, where he is, do not expect him to recover from his frightful experience.

For nearly nine full days he was battened down in the hold of the Morgan Liner El Monte, while she sailed out through the Guif of Mexico and up the coast to New York.

When the big ship arrived at her wharf, the 'longshormen began discharging her cargo. As one of the great bales ing her cargo. As one of the great bales was lifted from its place at the bottom of the hold, the shadow of a man—a man who was little more than a shadow—was seen lying in the hold of the ship. He was too weak to rise. That he was alive surprised every one. He could not get either food or water.

The day before he had eaten the last thresh of the leather sweet hand inside of shred of the leather sweat-band inside of his kat. He had chewed it, morsel by morsel, making it last as long as possible before he swallowed a mouthful. Of water he had not a drop, and when

Of water he had not a drop, and when his parched tongue began to swell and burn from thirst he turned his face to black, moist side of the Iron vessel and pressed his tongue against it. The scant moisture he licked from the iron plates did not quench his thirst—it aggravated it. But the cold and moisture prevented his tongue from swelling till it choked him, as it otherwise would.

When the longshoremen helped him out of the hold tears came to their eyes as they thought of his sufferings. Two men helped him to the company's office, and he told his story as well as he

He said his home was in Rockland, Maine, and that he had been traveling about the country, finally reaching New Orleans, where he found himself peoni-less. His sister sent him enough money to pay his way to New York. He showed her letter, which was a fond, sisterly epistie, in which she gave her brother good advice and also told about her marriage to a wealthy citizen of a small town of Massachusetts, which had just occurred.

Before he had bought a ticket young Burzell says some one robbed him of the money while he was asleep in a cheep lodging house in New Orleans. Ashamed to ask his good sister for more money, he went to the cotton port of Algiers and tried to ship as a sailor to work his passage to this city, where he was sure he could find work.

Failing in this he crawled into the hold of the El Monte and lay down to sleep through the night. Before he awoke the loading had been finished, the hatches battened down, and the El Monte was standing out to sea, He shouted, but of course was not heard.

Trying to move he faund that the bales of cotton had been shoved over him as he sleept, and there was not room in the parrow hole to stand up even.

Burzelle says he never expected to get out alive. Had the El Monte Isin a day longer before unloading he would have been dead. As it is the doctors at St. Vincent's say he will probably die, he is so weak and exhausted.

DEMOCRACY IN ENGLAND. Rapid Growth of Liberal Ideas in Great Britain. The rapid progress of the political institutions of Great Britain toward pure democracy has received several striking illustrations of late, says Epoch. But none is more remarkable than the virtual agreement between the chiefs of both parties that the house of lords can no longer stand in the way of an emphatic expression of popular will. Even as a drag on the car of legislation, the hereditary branch of the legislature has lost its power. The absurdity of retaining it at all will doubtless be recognized before
