A WASHINGTON BUTTON.

A Relic Supposed to Have Been Worn by the First President.

G. Hinckel, of Philadelphia, reasures a button, the likeness which is given below, which he has had for many years, and which he was told, when a boy, was actually worn by the Father of his Country.

The button is a little larger than a half dollar, is of copper bronze and bears the initials "G. W." surrounded by the legend in Roman type capitals, "Long Live the President." About this are the initials of the thirteen original states, each in the center of a link bound to its two neighbors.

An article on "Reminiscences of Presidents of the United States," in Arthur's Home Magazine, of the year

Sold at K. 1851, prints a description of the button, and the writer surmises that it was struck in Connecticut soon after the revolution and that the buttons were worn by people as a token of their gratitude to the nation's deliverer.
