THE JURY COULD NOT AGREE.

The Case Comes Up To-morrow When It Will be Set for a Hearing-The Prosecuting Attorney Expected a Disagree ment-Scenes in the Court Boom-Many Wagers on the Result-Murmurs of Regret-Bellef that a Second Trial Will Give the Actor His Freedom.

Sax Francisco, Feb. 26.-Long bef or the opening of Judge Troutt's court the corridors leading to the court room were crowded and it was with difficulty that those whose business_called them there could enter.

The discussion at times among those omposing the crowd ran high, and on the faces of many could be seen looks of expectation and hope that Curtis would be acquitted. Others were there out of simple curiosity.

Numerous wagers were made on the result of the jury's deliberations.

Mrs. Curtis came into court accom-panied by a lady. As she held a whispered convessation with some of her sympathetic friends, it was plainly to be seen that she was auxious.

Curtis entered the judge's chamber shortly after the entrance of Mrs. Curtis. He looked pale and tired, and held a short conversation with his wife. It was evident that the strain of the trial had rold on him. When Judge Troutt entered silence at once prevailed in the room. He an-nounced that the jury had not as yet reached a verdict, and that the court would adjourn. This announcement seemed to please Mr. and Mrs. Curtis, for in this delay they both found ground for the brightest hopes.

Friends who have stood by Actor Curtis all during his trial surrounded him and cheered him up as best they could.

They all assured him that he would be all right; that there was not the least doubt of the fact that he would be acquitted and in a few days he would once more be a free man. Curtis thanked them and seemed to take much comfort Curtis thanked out of their cheering assurances. One rumor started that the jury stood eleven to one for acquittal, and that the juror adding out would be soon brought over to the majority.

Then the jury filed into court and an-nounced that they had not agreed on a verdict and that there was no likelihood of them ever coming to an agreement. Judge Troutt stated that he would not accept this report as final, and sent them back for further deliberations, with instructions that they were to report at the end of two hours.

When the jury returned to the court room, Judge Troutt again promptly con-vened his court. Both Actor Curtis and his wife were perceptibly nervous and anxiety was strongly depicted upon their countenances.

The attorneys for the defence, who sat by the actor and his little wife, had a look of deep concern on their faces.

Assistant District Attorney Hinkle stated that he was by no means confident that a verdict of conviction would be rendered. It was very apparent that he rendered. It was very apparent that he expected a disagreement.

After the jury had taken their seats in the jury box they were asked by the court if they had come to an agreement. the foreman arose and said: "No; we are still unable to agree. The jury stands ten for conviction and two for acquittal." Thereupon the court ordered the jury discharged.

The case will be called again tomorrow, when it will be set for hearing. The result when automorrow was re-

The disagreement is the topic of conversation all over the city, and while all express themselves as sorry that Curtis was not acquitted, they are of the belief that his second trial will give him his

ADVOCATES ARMY REFORMS. Report of a Parliamentary Committee or

British Naval Affeirs. LONDON, Feb. 26 .- The Parliamentary Committee's report on the condition of the army service is published. The report approves the short service system; highly praises the Indian army; admits that there are numerous defects at home (where it is computed only 20 to 30 per cent. of the soldiers are fit to supply Indian drafts); says that youths quite unfit for any kind of service ought not to be classed as effective soldiers, and advises various reforms to stimulate re cruiting, increase the pay and better the condition of soldlers.

The report was only carried by the easting vote of the chairman. A minority report voicing the ideas of the War Office was issued simultaneously, condemning the proposed reforms on the ground of great expense.
