ASSESSMENTS AND COMMISSIONERS.

certain cost, that cost is the basis of actual value.

Mr. Glover took issue on this point and made a lengthy and forcible argument. He claimed the price for which a property would sell at the time of the assessment is made is the basis of valuation. He put this question, "If a man builds a house to suit his own fancy at a cost of $90,000 and afterwards cannot get a bid of more than $10,000 for it, what would be the basis of assessment?"

Mr. Minogue answered the cost—$90,000. Assessor Krick then made an illustration. If a property cost $6,000 and $13,000 is offered for it, what is the basis?

Mr. Minogue looked at the ceiling, blinked, and then lowered his head saying that is only for argument. Mr. Krick said he had knowledge of such a case. Then Mr. Minogue answered, "Why, the $13,000!"

Mr. Glover jumped to the floor with a victorious grin encircling his mouth and asked, "Then how does your other theory compare with this? You told us in the case of the $30,000 and $10,000 house that the cost price is the basis. In the other case you say it is the selling price?"

Mr. Minogue answered, does the party who buys the $6,000 property pay $13,000 for it? Is not that the cost?"

Mr. Minogue was reminded that the property was not bought for $13,000. That was the price offered for it. If the assessors know that willing purchasers value a property at $13,000 are they to take that as the basis, or take the cost—$6,000?"

Mr. Minogue made no direct answer to this, simply insisting on what he had said—that the cost price is the basis. He made no answer to the argument that if an assessor knows that $13,000 is offered for a property that is a basis for valuation independent of the cost; and that the same rule applies where a $30,000 property has depreciated in the market to $10,000.

Messrs. Beddall, Fowler, Glover, Hess, Lamb and Kehler made arguments depicting the action of County Commissioners in the past, in breaking faith with the borough of Shenandoah by lowering the valuation of coal lands and certain properties after promising a joint committee of the Council and School Board not to do so.

Mr. Minogue: "You may assess your properties as you please, but the Commissioners have the right of revision and may raise or lower the assessment as they see fit."

"Then, what is the use of making assessments?" "What is the use of having assessors work night and day trying to get at a fair value of properties and then have the figures cut down, or lowered, by the Commissioners who have, perhaps, never seen the properties?"

A question by B. G. Hess as to whether or not the present Commissioners have fulfilled their oaths of duty aroused Mr. Minogue, who jumped up, took his hat and coat in hand, and declared the question was an insulting one and he would not answer it. He said he was present to protect the Commissioners as well as himself and he did propose to be insulted. He did not attend the meeting to insult any one, or raise a fight.

For a moment or two it looked as if the County Solicitor would leave the room unceremoniously, but assurances that there was no intention to insult any one quieted matters and Mr. Minogue resumed his seat.

Mr. Krick read the oath taken by assessors to the effect that they must be guided by the price a property may bring at a bona fide sale.

Mr. Minogue referred him to Purdon's Digest and insisted that the cost was the proper basis.

Mr. Krick contended that he, as an assessor, considered his oath binding.

James Grant asked what a property, costing $4,000 and depreciated in value by the erection of a scraper line in front of the doors, would be worth.

Mr. Minogue made no direct answers, but intimated that perhaps there are cases which would be exceptions to the rule laid down by him.

The meeting adjourned with the understanding that a committee will accompany the assessors to Pottsville to protest against the orders of the Commissioners.
