James McCiowan, his wife and son William, 10 years old, are supposed to be buried in the ruins.

The building, a 7-story brick, fronted on No. 14 and 18 Pearce street, and was 118 feet long by 50 feet wide. It had just been erected by Young & Kent, manufacturers of brass work, and was practically completed, the roof having been finished this week. It was the centre of a mass of oneaad two story frame buildings, nearly all of which frame buildings, nearly all of which were occupied by poor people. Immediately in the rear of the building was a two story brick house, the home of Thomas Hulett, who lives there with his wife and nine children. They were at supper, and were entertaining as guests supper, and were entertaining as guests Miss Emma Hope, a relative, and her friend, Mrs. Ada Keown. When the building fell the force of the terrible mass of brick and iron, wood and plaster seemed to be directed rearward, completely burying the structure. All the inmates were killed or injured.

Frank Dillens, who happened to be passing on the street and was an eyewitness to the disaster, said that he first noticed the rear wall bulging out. The rain was driving in torrents and there had just been a fearful gust of wind. There was a lound crash, and he was

There was a lound crash, and he was conscious of a deafening noise, which continued for some time as the masses of debris piled on the smaller structures.

Then arose cries and screams of those buried unfortunates who were not dead or unconscious beneath the tons of fallen walls. An alarm of fire was turned in, and as soon as the nature of the calamity was appreciated assistance began to arrive from all directions, and the work of tearing away the wreckage was promptly
