Caught at Havre, But Gets Away Again.

HE HAD SAILED FROM NEW ORLEANS

Arrested as Ho Was Leaving the Steamer No Details as to How He Escaped, But it is Thought That the French Detectives Were Bribed.

LONDON, May 24.-A dispatch was received here yesterday from Havre, stating that the French police had captured Thomas O'Brien, the American bunco man, as he was quietly slipping ashore from the steamship Marseille, which had arrived from New Orleans. Shortly after another message came saying that O'Brien had once more succeeded in making his escape and had disappeared, no one knew where.

There is little doubt that a companion of the bunco steerer, O'Brien, bribed the detectives who had charge of O'Brien to let him get away. Officers from Scotland Yard were preparing to go to Hayre to identify O'Brien when news arrived that he had escaped. The commissary of police at Havre is greatly stirred up on account of O'Brien having got away, and he has not only culled all his subor-dinates to account, but has telegraphed to every port in France a description of the man.

A liavre dispatch says that it is certain that O'Brien has not got away on any of the railway trains, and the police there believe that he must have gone on board a steamer or other vessel just starting for a port along the coast or for Great Britain. The French police think that he will try to make his way to Bordeaux and thence to South America.

The police of Gravesend, Dover, and detectives from Scotiand Yard are out watching for O'Brien, who is expected to land on the English coast. The American Legation has made special ef-forts to secure his capture, and it is eafe to say that O'Brien cannot land any-where on the southern coast of Eng-land, or at any considerable port in the United Kingdom, without being arrested Immediately.

Police Inspector Roberts of Gravesend and Sergeant Nowland of Scotland Yard description of O'Brien has been sent to every part of the such as trace of the fugitive.

A description of O'Brien has been sent to every town of Scotland Yard went out on a launch and stepped and boarded the Nessageries steamer Ebre on which it was thought, O'Brien had fied from France. They went through an annual product of 20,000,000 quills.

The eyeball of the owl is immovably fixed in its socket, hence the look of to every town in England.

Orienns on May 1 for Havre and Antwerp.

The fugitive tried to leave the steamer with the cargo, when he was detected and captured.

The French police appear to have been on the lookout for him, and one of their best detectives was watching at the wharf.

O'Brien appeared to have waited on board until all was quiet before attempting to go ashore. He tried to leave in the confusion attending the removal of the cargo, and would have escaped, but for the fact that a watch had been left at the steamer with instructions to keep a close lookout for him.

It is said that on the way over some of O'Brien's actions led the crew to suspect that they had an escaped criminal of some importance on board, and it is also stated that a hint was given to the police authorities at Havre upon the arrival of the vessel.

O'Brien was greatly taken aback by his capture, and inquired if the new ex-tradition treaty between France and the United States, of which it appears he knew something, had yet gone into ef-

Upon being taken to the headquarters of the police in Havre he was at once subjected to the anthropometrical system of measurement, in order that, if he escaped agein, he might be readily recognized, at least in France.
O'Brien submitted in good grace after first protesting that an American citizen should not be subjected to the indignity of having his toe nails measured and calves inspected by inquisitive foreigners.

The French police were surprised at his gentlemanly appearance and fine physique, and said that he was far superior in every way to the ordinary English criminals who occasionally fell into the hands of the Havre authorities. Apart from taking the prisoner's measurement and keeping him in the most vigilant charge, they treated him with every consideration.
