cars and a freight enwere badly damaged and several gine hours were required to remove the wreckage, but no person was injured.

At about half past six o'clock last even ing an east bound coal train pulled along the lower road past the Brownsville station on to the long curve that leads to the deep cut that is spanned by the borough bridge the dam. He stripped over his clothing near the Kohinoor colliery. The coal train was stopped midway between the Brownsville station and the bridge and the rear brakeman was sent back to signal. A moment or two later the Empire freight train, with one engine in front and two behind, bound from Mt. Carmel to town, thundered down the heavy grade from the railroad on the mountain. Before the crew of this train saw the signal of the coal train brakeman it was too late to prevent a collision. The front engine of the freight train crashed into the rear end of the coal train. The speed of the former train was somewhat reduced before the crash. Had it not been the damage would have run into Charles Radzewicz, thousands of dollars and some of the crew would have been killed, or very seriously injured.

As a result of the collision seven loaded coal cars were thrown into a heap and the smoke stack and other parts of the freight engine were badly damaged. Wreck crews arrived upon the scene with apparatus at about seven o'clock and worked until nearly midnight before they succeeded in clearing away the wreckage. No official announcement has been made as to the cause of the wreck, but it is understood that the crew of the freight train claim that the brakeman sent out to signal did not get far enough to the rear of is supposed to have been a resident of this the coal train.

GLEANINGS BY THE DROWNED IN A DAM George Katowicz Met His Death While Swimming To-day.

At noon to-day, a poorly dressed, but rather respectable looking man went up to AN OLD LAW SUIT SETTLED the dam above the north end of Main street and commenced to disrobe. He chatted pleasantly for a few minutes with IT AROSE FROM STOCK DEALINGS the young men and boys who loitered about the place and then waded into the water.

The man jumped up and down in the water several times. Those on the bank thought the man was amusing himself. Before entering the water he said he could swim and none who witnessed his actions entertained the thought that he was drowning. Suddenly the man clapped his hands over his face and disappeared beneath the surface. He did not rise again.

After waiting a few minutes the boys who stood near the edge of the dam concluded that the man had drowned, and has tened to town to give the alarm.

A young man named Thomas Jefferson residing at the corner of Main and Coal streets, was one of those who hastened to and dived into the water to search for the body.

After several ineffectual attempts Jefferson located the body in a place where the water was about eight feet deep. He brought the remains to the surface and, with assistance, placed them on the bank of the dam.

There was no one at the place to identify the man, but a pass book found in a pocket of the deceased's cost showed that George Katowicz had an account with grocer

A FALL IN THE MINES.

Thomas Ferguson Sustains Serious Injurles at Boston Run Colliery.

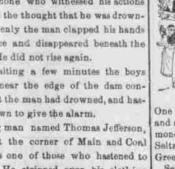

Themas Ferguson, Jr., was seriously inured by falling in the mines of Boston Run colliery. He fell into one of the "cage holes," a distance of about fifteen feet. He was placed in an ambulance and removed to his home on South Plum alley.

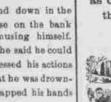

Dr. Hamilton attended Ferguson and found that he had strained the muscles of his neck and bruised his right shoulder badly. When Ferguson fell the right side of his bead and the right shoulder struck the bottom first. The doctor says the injuries are serious, but not necessarily dangerous.

Ferguson is about nineteen years of age. He had not worked for three months and walked over to the Boston Run colliery this morning in search of a job. He was waiting to be assigned to work when he fell
