RAILWAY WARS.

Think of the millions spent to prevent it, yet the Baltimore and Ohio is here. Take the Bolt Line controversy. The money wasted in opposing the Bolt Line was thrown away. Take the war upon the Reading terminals—the long, weary, costly war. In spite of the lavish disbursements to prevent it, the Terminal grows into majestic forms of iron and stone on Market street, and the Pennsylvania is wisely following with a noble building, in a spirit of commendable business emulation.

Philadelphia has as deep an interest in the failure of this wretched, despicable business of "conquest exhaustion" as she ever had in the building of the Pennsylvania. The interest is the same. The Pennsylvania has done good work. Let her keep on doing it and all good go with her. Philadelphia sees that the Reading has likewise done good work. Philadelphia has in the Royal Blue, between Washington and New York, one of the best trains in the country. She has a second line direct to Buffalo and the Lakes. She has another system to the seashore, as hundreds of thousands will gratefully acknowledge in these harsh, baking days. She has swift and special access to the Lehigh and Schuylkill valleys, with their assurance of beautiful homes. The Philadelphia man may go to Hartford, Boston, the Berkshire Hills, to the rocky coasts of Maine and the Canadas, without that tribute to discomfort involved in shambling and dragging about New York. The pilgrim to Chicago, because of the Reading system, may go by way of Niagara and return by way of West Virginia and see the wonders of the wonderland. These are the results of business foresight, the outcome of a spirit of enterprise, the development of a policy that would keep pace with the gigantic strides of a great city. President Roberts, in his address at the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania stockholders, dwelt upon a prosperity which enabled him to expend in the state alone a million dollars a week. No citizen grudged President Roberts a penny of this. It was assuredly a prosperity that the growth of the Reading has not disturbed. It is in the nature of these enterprises that one should help the other; that they should develop new wants, new industries, new sources of pleasure and recreation, new channels of trade. There is room on the sea for the Cunard, the Inman, the French, German, Italian steamships. Why grudge Philadelphia another trunk line? And more especially why in the interest of those to whom investments are property in its most sacred form, indulge in these legal wars of "Conquest by Exhaustion." Nothing is conquered, and exhaustion is in the end quite apt to fall upon innocent stockholders whose money is wasted in prosecution of Gummere and other suits like the barren proceeding which failed at Easton on Monday.

This war of "Conquest by Exhaustion" is not merely between two companies, the one striving to follow the World's and have the other "eaten up by its own lawyers," but a war upon values. It involves an eminent peril. It is easy to fire a prairie, but how hard to govern the flames? Capital, and especially capital of the poor investor, ever sensitive, grows more so from day to day. The capitalist sees Wall street on one side and the anarchist on the other. He knows they mean to wreck him—the anarchist, because possessed by the spirit of ignorance and sin—Wall, street because in the ruin of others is swift gain. He sees his property assailed by dross, menace, misrepresentation, and competition meant to destroy. Against these he may defend himself. But where is his defense, where is the security of his investment when he reads that property is to be deliberately "conquered" by innumerable and exhausting processes of law? To him the asylums of justice are to become the arsenals of anarchy and destruction. It is surprising that distrust should spread; that foreign investors should be wary of securities of inherent value? The railroad war is a war upon property. The means proposed by the enemies of the Reading would, if unchecked by public opinion, destroy any interest in the land. Conquest by exhaustion is simply anarchy under the pretext of equity and law. Judge Schuyler, of Northampton, has summarily put an end to the Gummere experiment. Others remain, and in the best interests of the city, of property and justice, they should have as swift and condign a fate.—Phila. Star.

New Collieries.
The Shamokin Herald says that in less than one year the new collieries now in contemplation by the Union coal company will be in the last stages of completion. The Mid Valley company will also be ready to start work on the new colliery up the valley. The three collieries will add about 5,000 more people to this part of the county inside of two years. The plants will be fine containing the latest improved machinery and appliances. The eastern portion of the county is rich in the choicest of coal and the supply is seemingly inexhaustible.

PETER'S PENCILINGS.

Pungent Paragraphs on Affairs of Local Importance.

HE communication in yesterday's HERALD, signed "Examiner," proved a tickler. Some smiled, others scowled, and a few looked puzzled after reading the letter. The latter class of people wondered that such a state of affairs could exist, but when they become better acquainted with the power behind the throne of the present borough government they will be able to see through it all without the aid of glasses. The present condition of the borough's affairs even causes a smile to pass over the weather boards of the shanty that covers the stone crusher.

The Borough Council will meet this evening. The meeting should be an interesting one. The street committee and supervisor will tell how much it costs to take away the stones that were recently put on the streets; the fire apparatus committee will tell about the fire alarm system that doesn't alarm; and quite a lengthy discussion is expected on the alleged exorbitant charges of the HERALD for advertising the special election. Taking the programme as a whole, the HERALD subscribers may expect some interesting reading matter the next few days.

The Democrats of town need not go into hysterics over the movement to divide the wards. The steps taken to give every legal voter in the town a chance for fair representation at the polls. The Republicans cannot accede to the lines for division drawn by the Democrats, because they are drawn on strictly partisan principles; consequently the former must insist upon the adoption of their proposed lines or, for some hope of salvation against Democratic gluttony, ask that the original report of the viewers be adopted.

What, ho! Who stole the documents relating to the proposed division of the wards? We will take a handful of "pi" the thief was not a Republican.

It is certainly a piece of great injustice that at least three hundred voters of this town should be deprived of their right of franchise at the next election by reason of a thief going into the Schuylkill county court house and stealing the documents that provided for the division of the wards. Who stole the papers? Don't all answer at once.

A gentleman of Pottsville prominently identified with affairs of the county, while talking about the proposed division of the wards of this town yesterday, said: "All the work must be done over again. Every bit of it, because of those papers having been stolen—ahem, I should say mislaid, lost," or something like that.
