BARTENDERS.

How They are Sometimes Taken in by Smart Tramps.

The ingenious and indigent tramp with his multitude of shifty devices to get a drink without paying for it has been the theme of many a good story. The very originality of the thirsty pauper's plausible schemes draws a smile from even those who deplore the moral laxity of the transaction. Not a few of you have heard the oft-told story of the tramp who plaintively inquired if the bartender would have the heart to take his last cent for a drink, and when the stony-hearted one answered "Certainly," ordered the beverage, drank it and threw down a solitary copper with the remark: "Well, there it is!" Or that other, and perhaps more familiar one, of the thirsty individual who, after draining his morning dram, asked if "Bill Bliffins had been around yet?" "Who's Bill Bliffins?" asks the unsuspecting bartender. "Why, don't you know him? Little man, short in one leg. Walks like this," and out of the saloon limps the chuckling tramp, leaving his victim in solitary rage.

These old tales and some that were new, at least to the reporter of this paper, were spun the other evening at Schiedy's cafe, on Main street, where some of my friends had enticed me with the seductive bait. "Billy" Williams is responsible for the story that follows: "It was told to me by a Kansas City boniface," said Williams, "and on his shoulders be the blame if it has a chestnut flavor. One morning, while his bartender was absent, a nervous-looking little chap with stony frock coat buttoned up to the chin to conceal the shirt that wasn't there, came into the saloon with a quick and business-like step. Rubbing his hands energetically he said: "Little of your best, in a hurry, landlord."

"He took an allopathic dose, and dived into a vest pocket for the money, when an idea seemed to strike him and he removed his hand and said: "Good-sized place you have here, landlord. What's the dimensions in feet?" "The landlord wasn't exactly sure, but thought they were something like 30x70, as near as he could guess. "Don't believe it," said the inquisitive gentleman. "If you bought this property at any such size you'd have been swindled."

"The landlord didn't like that. It excited his German blood and he hotly told his mathematical customer that he didn't know what he was talking about.

"Don't eh? Well I'll just bet you a case of wine that your blamed old shebang isn't forty feet deep."

"The indignant proprietor saw a lead pipe cinch in this wager and snapped it up on the spot. The seedy chap pulled a ball of twine out of his pocket and gave one end to the landlord. The pair proceeded to the rear of the property, and the man of figures said: "Now, then, you hold the end here while I measure, and he started off towards the front of the house. "When the landlord grew tired of waiting for the measurement to be announced he came forward and untied the end of string from the front door-knob. Otherwise he might have been waiting yet."

"Lanigan" Boyer said that reminded him of a story told him when he was out in Texas to see his old friend, "Squire Will. rich, formerly of town, where at least one barkeeper could not be taken in. "It happened in Texas while I was doing some fine frescoing. I forgot the name of the town, but there was only one saloon there, so the place couldn't have been very imposing in size. One morning, while I was in the place, purchasing a cigar, a man dressed like a workman, with his sleeves rolled up, rushed in and excitedly yelled: "A drink of whiskey, for God's sake! I've been bitten by a tarantula!" "Good gracious!" said the bartender, taking a toothpick from the counter; "you don't tell me. When did it happen?" "I was working on the railroad and it crawled out from under a tie," gaped the unfortunate sufferer. "Well, that's tough," murmured the other, softly chawing his toothpick.

"Yes, but, for heaven's sake, hurry up, or I'm a dead man," implored the man. "Dear me, where did it bite you?" inquired the bartender, showing for the first time something like sympathy.

"On the wrist," exclaimed the frenzied man; "but if you don't give me that whisky quick I will die right before your eyes!" "Is the sun shining?" asked the man behind the bar, looking out the window. "Yes, it is, but what's that got to do with it?" "Well, the bites are not nearly so bad when the sun is shining."

"Good heavens, would you let a man die just because his money is in his other pants?" shrieked the poisoned sufferer.

"Guess you'd better go back and get your other pants," said the saloonkeeper, and the tarantula bitten man went out saying ugly things, while the hard-hearted dealer explained: "I expect I will make a mistake some day, and some fellow will die right here on the floor. But tarantula bites have been pretty regular here, and none of them have died on the floor yet. Guess I'll keep on taking chances." I would like to see some of your smart tramps get the better of that saloonkeeper."

A Little Girl's Experience in a Lighthouse. Mr. and Mrs. Loren Trescott are keepers of the Gov. Lighthouse at Sand Beach, Mich., and are blessed with a daughter, four years old. Last April she was taken down with measles, followed with a drenching cough and turning into a fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere "handful of bones."—Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was completely cured. They say Dr. King's New Discovery is worth its weight in gold, yet you may get a trial bottle free at C. H. Hagenbuch's drug store.

A Bulldozing Threat. Certain Republicans of town borrowed the registration books that were used by the Democrats when before the voters on the ward question the other day. Last night some of the first ward Democrats made a demand for the surrender of the books under a penalty of criminal prosecution. As the books were borrowed, and not stolen, it is hard to see on what ground a criminal action can be based. But do the Democrats cherish the idea that the Republicans have not an equal right with them to inspect these books? If they do they are badly mistaken. The Republicans are in the minority in town, but they have rights which the Democrats are bound to respect.

McCreery Confers With Foster. WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—Consul McCreery was in conference with the Secretary of State for a short while during the morning, presumably in relation to the charges made against him of misconduct during the Chilean trouble. It is understood, however, that nothing will be done in the matter until after the Secretary's return from Deer Park. If an investigation is decided on, Secretary Foster will probably conduct it himself.

A Long-Lost Art Discovered. QUINCY, Aug. 13.—Local scientists say that one of the most wonderful discoveries of recent years is that made by a poor blacksmith of this city, named Ferdinand Allard. It is the long lost art known to the pyramid builders of Egypt, of hardening copper. Axes and other edged tools made of hardened copper have been exhibited by him, which in edge and temper rival the best steel of the present.

Drowned in the Surf. ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 13.—Samuel Reed, a produce dealer living on Moor street, Philadelphia, was drowned in the surf at the foot of Arkansas avenue. He swam 300 yards from shore, when he threw up his hands and called for assistance. Reed was still alive when brought to the shore, but every effort to resuscitate him was without avail.

Fear of Another Revolution. PANAMA, Aug. 13.—The report brought here from Honduras by the steamship Barracosta nine days ago is confirmed. Gen. Leonardo Nula has been completely successful and is holding his own in the north. Gen. Bonilla is victorious in the south. There are, however, fears of another revolution and the overthrow of the government.

Netleton Will Not Resign. WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Assistant Secretary Netleton left Washington last evening for his home in Minnesota. He will be absent one month. Mr. Netleton says the statements that he will resign are unfounded, as he expects to resume his duties at the expiration of his vacation.
