IN WOMAN'S BEHALF.

ABLE AND ENERGETIC.

Two Women Who Have Done Good and Clever Work.

The Queen, a London paper, has the following to say of two women of that city:
Mrs. Rose Mary Crawshaw, whose name is linked with nearly every movement for the benefit of women that has originated in London, and Mme. Louisa Canziani, who has had a number of her pictures well placed on the walls of the royal academy.

Mrs. Crawshaw is probably best known by her lady-help project—an effort to enable women of birth in impoverished circumstances to gain a livelihood. The word "lady-help" is her own. Such unfortunate ladies at one time flooded England. Not sufficiently educated to become governesses, and not clever enough to push their way without capital in any business requiring skill or experience, crowds of women reduced by the loss of father or husband were still eager to maintain themselves honestly, and plucky enough not to shrink before even menial duties, if by such means they might help their sicklier sisters, mothers or children. It was Mrs. Crawshaw who first recognized the necessity of doing something for this large and somewhat uninteresting, and greatly to be pitied, class of women. She observed with terror the enormous preponderance of women over men in England, the growing disinclination to allow women to compete with men in commerce, and the few choiced avenues of industry possible to respectable women; and knowing how many (and how naturally) women occupy their hands in their own homes in domestic work without any loss of self-respect, Mrs. Crawshaw formed a plan to place competent women as lady-help in the houses of persons kindly enough not to render the position unbearable. She opened an office in London in which ladies could be engaged as upper and under helps in cooking, housework, and nursing, and described her views very temperately in her book, "Domestic Service for Gentlewomen".

Considerable discussion in the chief London journal, much cheap derision and foolish opposition, followed the lady-help movement, as it follows all good work on novel lines. The precedent of Peppy and his sister was quoted; the country rang with the lady-help cry. There was not a paper in the United Kingdom that had not something to say about Mrs. Crawshaw, her book, and her scheme. Its success may be described in her own words, showing that it possessed a solid business basis. "The first two years my office was open it cost me $1,000 per annum; the next two years after it cost me $500 per annum; the two years after $250 per annum; and at the end of eight years it was on the brink of paying its expenses when I gave it up."

Other admirable schemes she set on foot. She started a cutting-out class for girls, to teach them to make their own clothes.

She instituted free readings, with song and recitations.
She opened seven free libraries within a radius of two miles of Cyfarthfa Castle, her home, eight years before the Birmingham free library created so much attention. These were always open Sundays as well as week days, and books were allowed to be taken home.

Beyond all of these and similar local interests, among which must not be forgotten the constant training of young Welsh girls for domestic service at Cyfarthfa, Mrs. Crawshaw's active mind was ever in advance of her surroundings. There is hardly any subject of national importance bearing on the interests of women, the suffrage, the population question, sanitation, marriage reform, etc., which Mrs. Crawshaw was not one of the first to study and to discuss.

Mrs. Crawshaw's unremitting labors have at last somewhat injured her once robust health and indomitable spirit. But she is still the ready friend of all who are trying to do good. Her bent is now chiefly scientific, and her purse is open to all who desire to help her in her endless projects to ameliorate the position of the poor, and to draw them out of the slough of superstition and unprofitable toil.

Mme. Canziani was born in London, and is the only child of Henry Starr, of Philadelphia, the descendant of an old Puritan stock that emigrated from England to the United States in 1693. Several members of the family distinguished themselves in music and literature, but it was reserved for Mme. Canziani to become an artist, and thus complete the family record of honorable success. She says that she "loved drawing in a tiny child," and that her parents still show some very bad little sketches of fabrics which she executed when at the age of six. Her first lessons were from a country drawing master, under whom she copied quaint landscapes, which he touched up with Chinese white and fixed on fancy mounts. The next step in this initiatory course was a kind of promotion, as she was permitted to copy certain sentimental crayon heads which to her childish conception appeared to be the ideal of all that was truly beautiful.

Persisting in her entreaty that she might be allowed to continue her drawing lessons, when she was about thirteen her mother by some happy chance visited a well-known London art school where the young girl was permitted to attend at such intervals as were regarded as being consistent with the scheme of her general education. Here she made so much progress that her first finished drawing from the antique was the means of securing her admission to the Royal Academy schools as a probationer, which was followed by her becoming a student. The important period of her art study at the Academy was not without substantial recognition, as Miss Starr's intelligent and earnest work was rewarded in the first instance by a silver medal for the best copy, among many competitors, of Murillo's "Beggars Boys," and, subsequently, the gold medal with a scholarship of $300 for the most successful historical painting, the subject of which was "David with the Head of Goliath Before Saul." The latter high testimonial was awarded in 1869, and it is worthy of note that both these medals were the first ever given by the Royal Academy to a woman.

Continuing her onward course the artist painted and exhibited a subject picture called "The Music Lesson," being the scene between Bianca and her two lovers, from the "Taming of the Shrew." This was placed in the Royal academy, and speedily found a purchaser.

The Liverpool Corporation purchased Miss Starr's 1873 picture of "Sintram" for the Walker Art gallery permanent collection. The next painting proving to be a marked success was "Hardly Earned," a tired daily governess, who, after her day's labor, has found her way to her poor lodging, and has from exhaustion fallen asleep by the fireless grate. Very attractive also in design and admirably painted was "A Peasant Scene in North Italy," the interior of a farmyard seen from a gateway, at which is assembled a group of peasants. In the center a gypsy woman selling ribbons and other articles from a basket, and near at hand is a poor-looking youth seated on a stone, eating his humble meal from a basin.

Although gifted with an intense love of nature, but little opportunity offered itself for the practice of landscape painting, so that Miss Starr commenced with figure designs because, to use her own words, "They seemed to come most naturally to her." But as time passed, her rather distinct talent for portraiture led to many commissions in that branch, and, as we have shown, she has certainly distinguished herself both as a limner and painter of idealistic subjects.

SIMPLE DIVERSIONS.

Some London Amusements of the Last Century.

A manuscript diary of a middle-class family belonging to the time of George the First shows anything but a stay-at-home life. The ladies were always going about. But they staid at home in the evenings. There was a very good reason why the women should stay at home. The streets were infested with prowling thieves and with dangerous bullies; no woman could go out after dark in the city without an armed escort of her father's apprentices or his men-servants. The occupations of a young lady—not a lady of the highest fashion—of this time are given by a contemporary writer. He says that she makes tippets, works handkerchiefs in catgut, collects shells, makes grotesque, copies music, paints, cuts out figures and landscapes, and makes screens. She dances a minuet or cotillon, and she can play ombre, lansquenet, quadrille and Pope Joan. These are frivolous accomplishments, but the writer says nothing of the morning's work—the distilling of creams, the confectioning of cakes and puddings and sauces, the needle-work, and all the useful things. They did not always stay at home. In the summer they sometimes went to Vauxhall, where the girls enjoyed the sight of the wicked world as much as they liked, the singing and the supper and the punch that followed.

We have quite lost the moughouse. This was a kind of music hall, a large room where only men were admitted, and where ale or stout was the only drink consumed. Every man had his pipe; there was a president. A harp played at one end of the room, and out of the company present one after the other stood up to sing. Between the songs there were toasts and speeches, sometimes of a political kind, and the people drank to each other from table to table.

It was a great fighting time. Every man who went abroad knew that he might have to fight to defend himself against footpad or bully. Most men carried a stout stick. When Dr. Johnson heard that a man had threatened to horsewhip him, he ordered a thick cudgel and was easy in his mind. There was no police, and therefore a man had to fight. It cannot be doubted that the martial spirit of the country, which was extraordinary, was greatly sustained by the practice of fighting, which prevailed alike in all ranks. Too much order is not all pure gain. If we have got rid of the Mohawks and street scoundrels, we have lost a good deal of that readiness to fight, which formerly met those Mohawks and made them fly. —Walter Besant, in Harper's Magazine.

Open Their Campaign To-night.

Major Calderwood, of the State of Washington, will address an open air meeting at the corner of Main and Centre streets this evening on the great prohibition issue. Major Calderwood is an orator and not a temperance lecturer and it is said that to hear him is a treat. He spoke to 700 people at Tumbling Run dam, Pottsville, yesterday afternoon. "We cold water men mean business," said J. H. Reichert to a HERALD man to-day, "the Baker ballot law with its unholly features, has made every 'Prohib' fighting mad and old Schuykell will hear from us in this fall. We are organizing clubs everywhere in this county, and we will hold 100 meetings in all."

Saturday's Picnic.

The members of the Evangelical Sunday school, of town, with many of their friends, went to Lakeside on Saturday morning and held a picnic there. Owing to the threatening weather the crowd was not as large as expected. The day becoming pleasant before noon induced many others to go down on the 12:35 train.

Arrested for Desertion.

Michael Valerius, formerly a well-known sident of this town, languishes in the Pottsville jail under a charge of desertion and non-support preferred by his wife. Valerius disappeared some time ago, leaving his wife to try and uphold the title to property on North Jardin street claimed by J. J. Francy. After a lengthy battle in the courts Mrs. Valerius lost the suit and several months ago was forcibly ejected from the property, which she inherited in 1862. Since her rejection Mr. Valerius has tried to support herself and children, but a few days ago she heard that her husband, who was in Luzerne county, had made considerable money and she sent a constable from town to arrest him.

GOOD PIE

is much prized, but many people can't eat pie because of dyspepsia or dyspeptic tendency.

EVERYBODY CAN EAT PIE

if it is made with Cottolene, the new pure substitute for lard. Cottolene is simply pure cottonseed oil and pure beef suet, two of the healthiest foods known.

Properly combined they are better than lard for all kinds of shortening, and everyone can eat, digest, and enjoy food cooked with it. Food that was indigestible when cooked with lard is easily digested when cooked with Cottolene, and many of the leading house-keepers of the land say they can make nicer bread, rolls, biscuit, cakes, cookies, ginger bread, pies, patties, tarts, griddle cakes, croquettes with Cottolene than with either lard or butter. Get it of your grocer and try it. Beware of imitations. Manufactured only by N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., CHICAGO, and 138 N. Delaware Ave., Phila.
