ANIMALS' THOUGHTS. Their Senses Regulated Not by Touch and Sight, but by Mind. It is very doubtful, indeed, whether people appreciate how great is the gulf between our human thoughts and feelings—thoughts more than feelings—and those of the lower animals. One hears commonplace of the possibility of an extra sense, and so on, often enough, but the entire difference of mental basis that must exist between us and the cats, dogs and horses which we fancy we understand, seems hardly ever to be conceived. In one direction all animals are alike—all dread death and physical injury, all eagerly seek and accept suitable food, all have in their earlier years that tendency to rehearse the serious business of after life which we call play.

These common needs and inclinations furnish a mental substratum, a lingua franca, that roughly all may comprehend, but into its crude, almost formless communications what an infinite amount of ourselves we are inclined to read in, without further justification.

The lion in the menagerie sprawls, with his green-gray eyes staring out, it seems, into the infinite. "Splendid fellow," we say; "noble creature! He is thinking of the blue mountains that bounded his desert world." About as much, dear poetess, as you, when you have that look upon your face, are thinking of the summation of infinite series of katabolic metabolism.

Let us first analyze a little the elements in the picture of the universe painted on our own minds. It is a harmony in space and time. You think of a thing as a form having a position in what you call space, and changing as the minutes, hours and days slip by. The human world is a world of pictures; our memories are sight images that we raise from the sleep in our brains for a little while. We seem to live at the back of our eyes. The human world is a visible universe par excellence.

But since the days of Bishop Berkeley we have come to perceive more and more distinctly that the eye sees so clearly, not by its own virtue, but as the result of the education afforded it by our hands. At first the world of the child must be a flat confusion of shapes, which it learns to interpret by the movement of its hands over the forms it sees. The vision is at first without depth, without relief, without modeling, or atmosphere. Prof. Preyer's little boy, many months old, tried to snatch the lamp in a railway carriage several feet beyond arm's length.

Those born blind who at a later age have been restored to their sight by medical skill, and who consequently had not learned to connect sight and touch impressions, fancied all the things they saw touched their eyes. Indeed it is one of the elementary teachings of psychology that our perception of space in our vision of the world comes to us through our fingers.

And the lion has no fingers. Neither do the cat, the dog, and the horse possess these necessary media to a nice discrimination of shapes and position. The horse, with its digits imprisoned in a horny hoof, is in a particularly bad case. It is impossible to believe that the painting on the eye of these creatures is interpreted by them with anything like the delicacy or truth that we can attribute to what we see. Moreover, a certain "yellow spot" of distinct vision" common to us and the apes is absent from their eyes.

The horse frequently seems to use his eyes independently of each other, undoubtedly the majority of animals do so; how then can we imagine in their case, for a moment, such a single picture of a world as we in our waking moments look out upon? A few simple experiments with a cat will convince anyone that she cannot distinguish a hand, with empty fingers, held toward her from one containing any not too odoriferous edible. A bull makes no distinction between the display of a red pocket handkerchief and the shedding of blood.

And while the animal may not, and in all probability does not refer its world to a space picture and think in visible images as we do, there is no doubt that in other respects its sensations may have a definition of mental value quite unknown to the equivalent sense in ourselves. We may "carry faces to the heavens" and stalk about the temporary lords of the world, but for all that our noses are poor things.

The human nose is an apologetic pimple compared with the magnificent organ of the horse or dog. Our sense of smell is, when contrasted with our sight and hearing, singularly under-estimating. We can arrange sounds into series; we know E is between C and F; we appreciate octaves and harmonies. Similarly we can put the colors into order, decide upon the amount of blue in a purple and get almost to emotion at the sight of a white star in the blue of the summer twilight, or of the amber sunlight glinting between the blades of grass.

But this aerial arrangement, this sorting and selective choice, is entirely beyond our rudimentary sense of smell. To us the idea of the scent of the violet being a rich harmony or the suggestion that the frying of onions is a discord or that patchouli and the new-mown hay are pleasant things in different times and keys sounds utter nonsense. Our noses are entirely too dull to effect the analysis necessary before scents can be distinguished as complex and sorted and recombinated so as to be made an aesthetic pleasure.

But with the animals we have named all this is different. Half the head of a horse or adult dog is nose. It is probable, therefore, that the dog's mind is based essentially on impressions of smell. He perceives the crafty Olyses through all disguises that hide him from human detection, sniffs him, and is satisfied. The stories of the faithful dog crawling to his master's picture and licking the boots of it, show a lamentable want of imagination—even of common observation.

Anyone who has watched a lost dog in the street must, or at least ought to, perceive that the animal has only the vaguest idea of what its adored master looks like. Only on that supposition can its movement be understood.

POLITICAL POT-POURRI. Squints at the Political Fields, County and National. The fight in the Third Congressional district between the Ker and McAleer forces is getting interesting. Harrity is being roundly denounced and the Ancient Order of Hibernians and other Irish organizations threaten to bolt the Democratic National ticket if Harrity does not take hands off.

Hon. Charles N. Brumh has challenged Congressman Kelly to a joint debate on the tariff question. In the event of Mr. Kelly refusing to debate Mr. Brumh will speak from the platform with any Democrat in the country.

The Irish World favors the election of Harrison and Reid, because they stand on the platform of protection to American industry.

Vermont held her election Tuesday and the result was most gratifying. Next week Maine, the state of Blaine, will be heard from.

The Republicans propose to wipe out the Democratic majority in the next Congress with every prospect of success.

The Democrats have given up the idea of carrying New York this year. Tammany did not irreparable mischief last year that honest Democrats will vote the Republican ticket as part of stem on it.

While the Democrats are "rainbow chasing" their forces in most of the Southern states are down and need repairing badly. The third party movement, encouraged by the Democrats to defeat Republicans in Republican states, like curses, are coming home to roost.

President Harrison's letter of acceptance is a mainly one—patriotic in every line. I will not dispute any one.

Did you hear from Vermont?

Our old and esteemed friend, Hon. Henry K. Boyer, ex-State Treasurer, was nominated for the Legislature from the Seventh Philadelphia district.

The Democratic papers have not yet heard from Vermont.

Heavy Sentences for a Convict. PITTSBURGH, Pa., Sep. 8.—Charles Haver, who recently assaulted Workhouse Keeper Eberhardt and escaped from that institution, was brought up in court and pleaded guilty to four charges of larceny, one of escaping from the workhouse, one for felonious assault and battery and one for larceny and receiving stolen goods. Judge Kennedy thereupon sentenced Haver to terms in the penitentiary aggregating nineteen years and two years in the workhouse.

Shot By a Circus Man. PITTSBURGH, Pa., Sep. 8.—While attempting to execute warrants charging the proprietors of Cook & Whitey's circus with permitting gambling in their side shows, where, it is alleged, several persons were robbed, several shots were fired at the officers. One man had his neck shot off. Two circus men were arrested. While pursuing another Officer O'Brien was shot in the side and probably fatally injured.

NEWS OF THE DAY. —At the Clinton County, N. Y., Republican Convention, held at Plattsburgh, John Haugrahn of Ellensburg was nominated for Assemblyman.

—A dynamite outrage is reported to have been attempted against the Paris Police Commissioner. The attempt was a failure and nobody was injured.

—The first division of uniformed Knights of Pythias left Poughkeepsie, yesterday, with invited guests and a band for Hartford, Boston, Fall River and New York.

—Four buildings in the Boulevard Richard, Paris, were destroyed last night. Leno's funeral stores, containing 2,000 coffins, were in one of the buildings burned.

—Fifteen-year-old Ida White, a pretty girl living on the Gravity Railroad near Waymont, N. Y., yesterday shot herself dead, using an old army gun for the purpose. She left a letter to her parents saying she was tired of life.

—B. V. Jenks of Schenectady, N. Y., died yesterday from the effects of an overdose of chloroform while in the dentist office of Dr. E. C. Bronson. An anesthetic was administered, but it failed to revive him, and he died in the physician's arms.

—The London Board of Trade returns for August show that imports increased two million, one hundred thousand pounds and the exports decreased six hundred and ten thousand pounds that month compared with those of the corresponding month last year.

Tricks in All Trades. Customer—I would like you to repair this watch. Now, I don't want you to tell me the whole mechanism is out of order and it will take two weeks to repair it, and cost half what the watch is worth. You can't fool me! I know a trick or two.

Watchmaker (meekly)—H'm! You are a watchmaker, I presume?

Customer—No; a doctor.—Puck.

The Naming of the Paper. One man suggested "Bugle," another "Weekly Blow," and still another thought "The Light" would flash and make her go.

Another man—a candidate—suggested "Weekly Vote."

Another thought "The People's Flag" was good enough to float.

But the man who caught the editor—though others thought him rash— Was the man who plunked a dollar down and simply murmured "Cash!" —Atlanta Constitution.
