THE COMBINATION.

It is not unnatural that the people of New York and New Jersey should regard with dislike the Reading Bailroad consolidation, or that they should welcome with exuitation the injunction granted by Chancellor Me-Gill, of New Jersey, upon the lease of of the Central Rollroad of New Jersey, New York city has long had the great advantage of active railroad competition, together with the larger advantage of free use of the Eris Canal. Philadelphia, meantime, has been practically to bondage to a single railroad company which possessed a monepoly under which branch of the Fennsylvania recently the commerce of the city could make no headway. Both New York and New Jersey for many years have been permitted to buy coal taken from the mines of Pennsylvania at less prices than were required of Philadelphians, who live nearer to the coal mines and who have a right to enjoy the benefit of their position. That New York city and the state of New Jersey should be averse to surrendering the advantages they have had in these particulars cannot be complained of, but it is equally unreasonable to complain that Philadelphians should try to obtain justice for themselves, and should rejoice when the instrument for obtaining it had been fashioued. It is safe to say that no event that has happened for many years gave more solid satisfaction to the commercial interests of this city than the extension of the power and the area of coutrol of the Reading Railroad Company. That great enterprise presented itself to Philadelphia, not as a combination for purposes of oppression and extortion, but as a project which would at once relieve the business of the city from the tyranny and hurt inflicted by the great corporation which hitherto had held Philadelphia trade at Its mercy. This relief, in fact, came at once. It appeared in the substitution, by rallway officials, of courteous soli station of freights, for insolent indifference; in the quick settlement of long deimmediate enlargement of certain kinds of commercial operations. No Philadelphia man not directly inter-Company would be willing to return from a mere whim. to the former condition of things. The practically universal feeling is that the city has had a great deliverance, and that now, for the first time for many | years, through the instrumentality of what does it cost? the Reading combination, the commercial forces of Philadelphia have a how much.
