MERCURIAL

Mr. J. C. Johnson writes: "About ten years ago I contracted a severe case of blood poisoning. Leading physicians prescribed medicine after medicine, which I took without any relief. I also tried mercurial and patch remedies with unsuccessful results, but which brought on an attack of mercurial rheumatism that made my life a torment."

After suffering four years I gave up all remedies and began using S. S. S. After taking several bottles I was entirely cured and able to resume work. S. S. S. is the greatest medicine for blood poisoning to-day on the market.

NEW YORK'S GALA DAY

The Immense Processions in Honor of the Discoverer of America.

FESTIVITIES TO CLOSE TO-NIGHT WITH A BANQUET.

The Greatest Demonstrations Ever Seen in the City—Fully Forty Thousand Men in the Day Parade—Vice-President Morton and Governor Flower Review—Four Governors in the Line—Beautiful Illumination of the Metropolis—Magnificent Night Pageant—Unveiling of the Columbus Monument.

New York, Oct. 13.—With last night's grand torchlight procession and illumination of the city New York's celebration of the discovery of Columbus practically terminated. There will be but one more feature, the grand banquet in the Lenox Lyceum to-night.

Last night's parade was one of the best features of the entire celebration. Never in the history of the city has there been such a pageant. In point of splendor and magnitude it eclipsed such renowned events as the Mardi Gras festivities in New Orleans, or the Festival of the Veiled Prophet, which has been such a feature in St. Louis.

The only attempt made by the residents of Gotham in this line was during the Philadelphia Centennial in 1876. Great as was the interest manifested in the school and college parades, the real interest was centered in the pageant and grand illumination of the city. It was to witness this sight principally that many of the thousands now in the city journeyed from all over the country.

The great military and civic parade had barely left the streets before the hour had arrived for the start of the night pageant. Those opening grand stands erected on the line of march of the day parade, and who were late in leaving, were hustled off, that their places might be taken by ticket holders for the night parade.

A TREMENDOUS CRUSH. The monster parades crowded so close upon each other that few of the vast multitude on the streets had time to secure even a morsel of food, and tired and weary from their day's battle in the vast throng, they again pushed forward for a place to view the final public fête of New York in honor of the discovery of America.

The crush of the day was bad enough, but that at night was far worse, for those who were kept indoors during the day by business that could not be suspended, added to the already crowded condition of the streets, and by 7 o'clock the throng was simply terrible.

The pageant started shortly after 9 o'clock from the Battery. Along Broadway to Fourth street, to Washington square the march was taken. Passing beneath the Washington monument the line continued up Fifth avenue to Fourteenth street. Marching by the statues of Lafayette and Washington a turn was made into Fourth avenue. At the corner of Seventeenth street the column wheeled to the left and continued to Fifth avenue. Up that thoroughfare to Fifty-ninth street the grand pageant proceeded.

As the column moved along Fifth avenue several powerful calcium lights placed at intervals flashed and illuminated the paraders and historical floats and tableaux depicted thereon.

FEATURES OF THE PAGEANT. The column was headed by Col. John J. Garnett, the Grand Marshal, and a score of aides. Then came the platoon of mounted police.

Immediately behind, and headed by A. A. Zimmerman, the record breaking bicycle rider, were 5,000 bicycle riders, riding twelve abreast. Each machine had a lantern at its head. A number of women riders from this city and Brooklyn were in this division. Each rider had her "wheel" decorated with two small American flags. Mrs. W. E. Smith, who enjoys the distinction of being the first woman bicyclist in this country, was in command of the division, with Miss Adelaide Raisbeck and Mrs. B. D. Farnum as aides. The riders were placed four abreast. In this division the banner depicting America's triumph was carried. A group of mounted heralds, sounding fanfares, closed the division.

Following Cappa's Seventh Regiment band was the first float in the pageant, the "Car of Fame." This was followed by a body of men dressed in a manner typical of prehistoric man, with a banner. The "Car of the Stone Age" showed the old cave dwellers and other primeval inhabitants. A group typical of the Toltecs surrounded the float.

The "Car of the Sun Worshipers," depicting the peculiar worship of these people, came next. The float showed the victim about to be offered as a sacrifice at the foot of an Aztec pyramid. Seated in a blazing sun was the high priest of the loam. A group of Aztec warriors bearing torches and burning incense marched behind the float.

Next came the Twelfth Regiment band, and behind it the "Victory of Genoa." This float was the gift of the Societa d'Unione e Fratellanza. Thirty members of the society acted as an escort to it. Float No. 5 had a statue of Columbus.

Following a group of Early Colonists came "John Alden and Priscilla," the subjects of the historic Puritan wedding. Four and a group of Quakers were also represented.

The "Car of Abuse" showed a group of smoking angels presided over by Harmony. From the centre of the float rose an immense lyre.

On the "Car of Science" were models typical of the latest discoveries in astronomy, mechanics and other arts. Pasteur, Koch and Haffkine were represented. The "Car of Poetry and Romance" typified a flowing brook, around which were seated the figures of all the American authors of note and poets.

A young girl seated in a rocking chair on a globe surrounded by all classes of women portrayed the "Supremacy of the American Woman."

A throng between two spheres, on which were seated the Emperor and Empress, represented the United Oceans. On a swelling sea, surrounded by mermaids, were two sirens carrying the City of New York. "Columbia's Ship of State" was represented by a Roman galley manned by centurions in full Roman dress. All the American Presidents were represented on this float. Columbia was at the helm.

The Central Park band preceded the "Car of Electra," the last float in the pageant. Twenty winged Amazons on horseback acted as an escort. This float was the handsomest of all. It was fitted with electrical appliances of all devices.

Five thousand members of the Improved Order of Red Men brought up the rear of the parade. Between each float and division were carried banners depicting historical scenes.

COLUMBUS STATUE UNVEILED. A formal manifestation of the good will existing between the United States and Italy and of the sense of obligation this country entertains to Christopher Columbus was made yesterday by the unveiling of a statue of the greatest of all discoverers, fresh from the master hand of Gaetano Rizzo.

The unexpected length of the military parade greatly interfered with the unveiling program. It kept Vice President Morton, Gov. Morton and Mayor Grant away. These officials all sent representatives.

Shortly after 5 o'clock Miss Barsotti broke the threads which held in place the drapey around the monument. The drapey fell away, the expectant throng gasped in amazement, and the statue of Columbus stood in all its beauty, receiving the plaudits and acknowledgments of thousands. The bands played the national air of Italy, the Garibaldi March, and the societies in the amphitheatre took up the stirring music and paraded around the base of the monument, shouting and pesterculating with all the ardor and determination of their enthusiastic race.

When the people had shouted until they could shout no more, Archbishop Corrigan, impressively blessed the statue, after which President Barsotti came to the rail and formally presented the monument to the City of New York.

THE DAY PARADE. One of the Greatest Demonstrations Ever Seen in New York. Everything in this wonderful week of Columbian celebration progressed in a sliding scale of increasing merit.

The fervor, earnestness and universality of the religious exercises of that "Twin Sabbath"—Saturday and Sunday last—were followed by the remarkable school and college procession of Monday.

That, in turn, yielded in interest to the great naval pageant, supplemented as it was by the demonstration of the Catholic societies of New York in the evening, so successful and so startling in its numerical strength. But, to quote the official orders, the "assembling, movement and disembarkment of the forces of the Army, Navy and National Guard, the organizations of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the various patriotic societies participating in the military parade under the marshaling of Gen. Martin F. McMahon, in celebration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America eclipsed all the preceding events, severally and collectively.

The Governors of five States—New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Massachusetts—the entire State National Guard of New York and powerful provisional brigades from Pennsylvania, Connecticut and New Jersey, strong forces of United States troops and blue-jackets, reinforced by such a majesty of civic parade as only the great cosmopolitan city of New York can produce, and one which was never before equaled, all combined to do honor to the occasion.

How much longer the fever of excitement could have been kept up without public danger might be asked, if these demonstrations were to continue.

It seemed as if the city never had been so full of strangers before, yet they continued to pour in. All the railroads connecting with distant points were taxed to their full capacity, and had to run their trains in sections. But good order and good humor everywhere prevailed.

Distinguished strangers were plentiful as blackberries in August. Without referring to those enumerated elsewhere as participating in the parade, among those who viewed the proceedings from different points along the route were Mrs. U. S. Grant, Mrs. Cleveland, Mrs. Geo. R. McNeill, Secretaries Foster of both the State and Treasury, Secretaries Bark and Noble, the Italian Minister, Baron Fava, who of right has been a leading and interesting spectator of the honors paid his countrymen, the Turkish Minister (Mavroyet Bey), and many others.

The order of procession being reversed from that followed on Monday and Tuesday, and the parade beginning downtown and marching up, instead of starting in the upper portions of the city and marching down, all the leading streets of older New York were laid under contribution as assembling grounds.

The numerous staff of Grand Marshal McMahon met in Washington square, near Broadway, at 8 o'clock. Troop A, of the New York National Guard, selected as the escort of the Grand Marshal, formed on Whitehall street, with its right resting on Beaver street, at 9 o'clock.

under their commander-in-chief, Gov. Patton, formed on Wall, New and William streets with their right resting on the corner of Broadway and Wall street at 10:30.

The New Jersey troops, 2,500 of them, under the command of Gov. Leon Abbott, formed on Liberty street west of Broadway and street south of it at 10:30. A small detachment of the Gate City Guard of Savannah, Ga., and other Georgian visitors made their rendezvous on Cedar street.

The Connecticut militia, 2,000 of them, Gov. Bulkeley commanding, formed on Liberty street east of Broadway. They were escorted to column by the Governor of Massachusetts and his staff.

After the Governor of Massachusetts came the Feniches of Washington city, the champion drill corps of the country. The Grand Army posts, 1,750 strong, were formed in line in Broome, Spring and Prince streets, and got into position at 11 sharp.

The New York City and volunteer fire departments—what would any civic parade be in New York without the old volunteer fire departments—formed on Bay, Fulton, Vesey and Barclay streets and Park Place.

The Italian countrymen of Columbus marshaled their military organizations in and around Beekman street. The German uniformed societies, over 12,000 strong, stretched all over the street east of Beekman and north of Park row, with their right resting on Broadway and Mal street. They formed the sixth division of the parade.

The French military organizations, "Gardes Lafayette" and "Gardes Rochambeau," very limited in numbers were grouped with other independent military organizations in the tenth and last division.

The new enumeration of the forces making up the mighty host of paraders show now formidable was the task Marshal McMahon and his aides undertook. It is deemed good marching, under favorable circumstances, to put 100,000 men to receive thousands must an hour past a given point. The great two days review in Washington in 1800, at the close of the war, when sixty thousand veterans swung past the reviewing stand in quick step occupied six hours each day. The Grand Army parade in Washington City last month, when a like number of veterans passed in review, occupied the same time.

The route of the procession was from the Battery, at the foot of Broadway, up Broadway to Fourth street; then turning west, passing round Washington square to Fifth avenue; along Fifth avenue from Seventeenth street to Fifty-ninth street (Central Park) and there to disband.

The arrangements for disbanding were as carefully and elaborately made beforehand as those for assembling. There was no informal "letting out." Each division marched to its allotted station and there dispersed. It is estimated that fully 40,000 men were in line.

The platoon of mounted police which headed the procession, had great difficulty in clearing the streets of lower Broadway. Wearing somewhat by the long day's observance of the day before, the great bulk of the spectators had, however, taken position further up town, so as to view the parade in its more advanced stages at a later hour in the day.

The fact that the last division was not ordered to be ready to fall into line until 11:45, an hour and three-quarters after the start, indicated that there was to be a long day of it.

Marshal McMahon and his brilliant staff were worthy of the day.

AT THE REVIEWING STAND. But here, breaking away from the further march of the great parade, as the other divisions, the military organizations of foreign citizens and the long line of German-American societies fell in line it will tend to a greater intelligibility of the scenes and incidents of the day to now take them up as they presented themselves to your reporter stationed at the Worth monument reviewing stand.

McMahon squared, immediately facing Vice-President Morton, Gov. Flower and the other notables.

Shortly after 10 o'clock the historic Old Guard in their white coats, blue and gold striped trousers and high bearskin hats marched down the avenue fifteen abreast, followed by three open carriages in which were Governor Flower, General Porter and the rest of his staff in full dress uniform.

The Governor's punctuality as he signaled and took his place on the stand was greeted with a well-earned burst of applause.

After the Governor had been seated the Guard of Honor marched down Fifth avenue to Vice-President Morton's house on the corner of Sixteenth street, and from that point escorted the Vice-President and Mayor Grant in a carriage to the reviewing stand.

After the Connecticut troops had filed past came Governor Russell of Massachusetts, escorted by the Washington Feniches, fully justifying by their splendid marching the champion badge they have twice won at National drill contests.

THE END NEAR AT HAND

Not Believed That Mrs. Harrison Can Long Survive.

SHE GROWS WEAKER EVERY DAY.

Her Cough Has Ceased, But This is Regarded as a Bad Symptom—The Left Lung Involved—President Harrison Standing the Ordeal Bravely.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—There is not the slightest doubt now that Mrs. Harrison is gradually growing weaker, and not the slightest hope is held out by her family for her recovery.

Since her return from Loon Lake the ravages of the disease from which she is suffering have been slowly telling upon her, and her condition is very much worse than when she undertook the journey.

About the only nourishment the distinguished patient is now able to take is raw eggs and beef tea. This has been her principal diet for some time, but her condition is such at the present time that she is only able to take these in very small quantities.

The fact that her cough has ceased is regarded as a very unfavorable symptom, and her left lung is involved. Mrs. Harrison sleeps most of the time, but when she awakens it is noticeable to her watchers that the rest does not benefit her, but only leaves her in a weaker condition.

Mrs. Harrison passed a fairly comfortable night, but the President thinks her condition so serious that it is not advisable to leave her bedside.

The ordeal through which President Harrison is passing is one that would be likely to break down a man of less will power. To the casual visitor who sees him at his desk, or shaking hands with general callers at the tri-weekly noonday receptions in the East room, or as he walks for half an hour through a quiet street just before dinner, he seems the same self-satisfied, well-poised man as ever, but his friends and intimates know that he has suffered a mental and physical shock that has left its mark.

For more than a month now the President has felt himself compelled to abandon almost entirely participation in the political campaign and to give only the most casual and meager attention to the thousand and one routine matters of public business that would under ordinary circumstances demand the most progressive and serious consideration.

Each mail brings to the President's desk communications from every State in the Union, asking that he do this, and that, and the other thing, to help along the general cause, or the particular fortunes of a personal or political friend. Every hour there are men with campaign suggestions waiting, and he gives only the most casual attention to the details of the campaign in any State and contents himself with turning the questions over to be settled by others.

GLASGOW FIEND CAUGHT. McEwan Found in a Field with His Throat Cut—Is He the "Ripper"?

GLASGOW, Oct. 13.—A sailor of the name of McNeill of the steamship Furness is under arrest charged with complicity in the murder and mutilation of the woman at West Lodge.

MacNeill says that he slept alone in a room at the other end of the corridor from McEwan's room, and left for work very early without seeing him. McEwan, he says, met his victim in the street and induced her to go to his room. Further knowledge of her MacNeill denies absolutely.

McEwan was caught yesterday in a field between Paisley and Glasgow. He had cut his throat and was lying weak from loss of blood in the corner of the hedge. He is under medical treatment and will probably recover. No statement was obtained from him.

The discovery that the uterus had been removed has given rise to fresh rumors that McEwan is Jack the Ripper.

Archbishop Saitell in New York. New York, Oct. 13.—The entire Catholic Church of this country is interested in the arrival on the steamship Majestic of Archbishop Saitell, who comes on an important mission from the Holy See. He is accompanied by Mgr. O'Connell.

Mrs. Deacon to Attend the Trial. GLASGOW, Oct. 13.—Mrs. Edward Parker Deacon has arrived, accompanied by her counsel, M. Harboux. She looks worn and anxious and leaned heavily on M. Harboux's arm. Interest in the trial has been increased, for until very recently she had not intended to be present and did not fully decide to come until yesterday. Mr. Deacon says he will insist that an indemnity be allowed in the evidence.

Outrage on English Missionaries. LONDON, Oct. 13.—The Shanghai correspondent of the "Times" cables that English missionaries have been mobbed by natives in Kiang Yow. The house of Mr. P. Phillips, head of the mission, was burned and he and his wife fled for their lives.

No Attempt on the Car's Life. PARIS, Oct. 13.—The "Siecle" story of a dynamite attempt upon the Car's life is a canard. The Car and Czarewicz have left Warsaw to unveil the monument to Alexander II. at Czesochowa.
