REPORTORIAL REFLECTIONS.

Themes Upon Which They Find Time to Comment.
The police and constable roll had a number of names added to it Saturday night and Sunday, but none of the cases were of a serious character. The police took a hand in one case on East Centre street Sunday night. At about 12 o'clock they saw Mike Darnschap and Simon Suble acting suspiciously in front of a house. One of them ran away when the police approached, but was caught. The other was arrested as he was crawling up stairs in a house occupied by a Jewish family. None of the occupants knew the men and as there were no specific charges against them they were released upon paying the borough fine and cost.

When driving in a carriage down Coal street Sunday night the two sons of William Jones, of White street, accidentally knocked down a Hungarian named Joseph Gadzewicz and a wheel passed over him, but did no damage. Gadzewicz and his companion, Stant Marciwlewicz, then grabbed the reins. Both were drunk. The Jones boys say they threatened to take the team and drive to Wm. Penn. A struggle ensued. One of the Jones boys was knocked down by a blow from a whip handle and Samuel Trevena, who went to the rescue of the boys, received a severe cut on the head from a stone. The Hungarians were arrested. Squire Shoemaker put them under $300 bail each on charges of assault and battery by Mr. Jones and Gadzewicz was put under $500 bail for hitting Trevena.

A singular case grew out of a wedding on "the rocks" Saturday night. Albert Kendra was charged with stealing a sextet of beer from the house where the festivities were being held. The boarding boss brought suit on the evidence of a friend who said he was an eye witness to the stealing, but when the case was up for hearing the witness changed his story and said the accused only lifted the sextet up to see if there was anything in it. Squire Shoemaker did not see the joke as the accused and witness did and committed both to the lockup. Yesterday the case was settled by the accused and witness sharing the costs.

This case recalls a similar one 'Squire Menaghan had some time ago. A woman complained that somebody had broken her clothes line and allowed the contents to fall upon the ground and become dirty again. A man told her he had seen a certain party out the fine and the woman caused the party's arrest. When the case came up the man who told the woman the story confessed that he did not see the cutting and that he had told the woman the story for fun. "You will have to pay the costs in this case for the fun you had," said the 'squire, and the practical joker paid them.

Some unknown parties placed a large stone in a frag of the electric railway opposite the Catholic church at Lost Creek, Sunday night, but fortunately the mischief resulted in no injury to the company or travelers. The first car passed over safely and the motor man removed the obstruction. If the parties who placed the stone are caught they will pay dearly for the trick. To attempt to wreck railway cars in an out-of-the-way place at night is an offense at which the law does not wink.

School Director R. A. Davenport drove to Frackville the other evening to install the officers of an Odd Fellows' lodge. He left the horse in charge of a hostler, who carelessly let the animal get away from him. The police of town stopped the horse near the Pennsylvania depot. The horse was dripping with sweat, but the remarkable feature of the case was that the animal and buggy had escaped without a scratch after a dash of four miles down the mountain from Frackville, across the valley, up the mountain to Turkey Run, across the mountain, down again, across another valley and up into town. That is certainly a record.

John K. Jones, who buys rags and bones, drove along Main street Friday behind his familiar old mule. The animal, judging from the carbuncles on its agencies of locomotion, has seen many years of experience and was probably born many moons before the famous Flora Temple first saw the dawn of day. No one in this town had an idea that his muleship would run away. John K. certainly had not. But circumstances alter cases. On this particular occasion the mule overheard an enthusiastic admirer of Nancy Hanks discussing speed. His ears went up with his tail and there was a dash. "Whoa!" yelled John K. A telegraph pole at the corner jumped to the rescue and got between one of the front wheels and the mule. "Shure, if it wasn't for the pole the d—! wouldn't stop him," remarked Motorman Groody, as he bounded along on his car.

The farmers who come into town from the neighboring valleys say "Everythings are going up, butter, eggs and everythings, and de older day a powder mill went, ha! ha! he! he! Make mine a small von." But this is only the humorous side of the farmers life of to-day. The products of the farmers are really going up. Prices of butter have taken a big jump and they attribute it to effects of the drought on pasture. The ground is so dry that the worms have even crawled into the patches of onions and sucked them dry. Eggs, they say, are also scarce on account of a peculiar disease that has attacked the chickens, but some heartless town people actually charge the farmers with Gouldian and say they are bullying the market.

A fellow scribe who has evidently been there puts this colloquy before the reading public. "These are the days in which the political reporter catches himself writing 'large and enthusiastic' in each account of a political meeting that he has been sent to whoop up, and 'slimly attended' in each account of a meeting held by the opposition party. But the political reporter can console himself with the thought that he is not nearly so bad off as the matrimonial reporter, who has to fight against the awful habit of writing "costly and numerous" every time he alludes to a bride's presents, year in and year out, and at all seasons."

Diphtheria has manifested itself in a form in Philadelphia that is creating alarm and vigorous measures for its suppression are being adopted. The Board of Health has been called upon to give its prompt and undivided attention to the disease and to allow no halting or hesitation in the work. The complete isolation of every house in which diphtheria occurs is urged and the board will be expected to carry the order into effect with stern rigidity. A pathetic case has come to light in the city. It shows how terrible the effects are when the slightest chance is given the disease. Dr. Grimm died at his home in Philadelphia Saturday morning. His death was caused by diphtheria contracted while treating a patient. A few weeks ago Dr. Grimm was called to attend a boy suffering from diphtheria in its worst form. The doctor did everything that skill could suggest for relief. All this proving useless Dr. Grimm decided on a final examination to determine the advisability of performing a surgical operation. As the physician leaned over the bed a sharp spasm shook the wasted frame of the child as he struggled for breath, and a slight cough spattered a few particles of the poisonous mucus from the throat into the doctor's face. He brushed it away at once and continued his examination, but in his desire to relieve the sufferer he failed to thoroughly destroy every trace of the discharge full of deadly germs. The child died soon after, and within two days Dr. Grimm noticed a slight soreness of his throat. He used some simple remedies, but the soreness increased and the symptoms of diphtheria quickly appeared, confining the doctor to his room. Other doctors were called in, but their efforts proved unavailable and Dr. Grimm grew steadily worse until death relieved him. He was chief of the medical staff of the University Hospital in Philadelphia.
