The Pennsylvania Railread Company an mounces its series of personally-conducted tours to Florida for January 31st, February 14th and 28th, March 14th and 28th, The party will travel by special train of Pullman sleeping and dining cars, and they will go through via the Atlantic Coast Line on fast schedule. The Tourist Agent and Chaperon will conduct each tour in both directions, ex cept that passengers on last tour will return independently by regular trains, and all the details will be carried out in that superior style for which these trips have become celebrated.

Excursion tickets, including railway transportation, Pullman accommodations and meals en route in both directions, will be sold from all principal stations on the system. They will be good only on the special trains, er on regular trains to the nearest point of connection with the special trains, and will only be accepted for the return trip on the regular returning train of that tour, except for the fifth tour returning, which will be good by regular trains. They will admit of a stay of two weeks in Florida, except in the ease of the fifth tour, which has a longer return limit, tickets being good for return passage until May 30th, 1893. For information detailing the tours application should be made to Mr. Geo. W. Boyd, A. G. P. A., Philadelphia.

Personally Conducted Tours and Their Growth.

That the American people are becoming a race of travelers is evident from the complete and choice arrangement of pleasure tours which is set before them by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for the season of 1893, First comes a series to the Golden Gate, leaving New York, Philadelphia, and Harrisburg February 8th, March 2nd and 29th. 1893. Tourists will travel by superbly-appointed special trains of Pullman drawingroom, sleeping, dining, smoking, and elser- drinks for everybody present while his vation cars, under the supervision of a Tourist Agent and Chaperon.

MAT'S HUSBAND.

No One But Herself Knew Why She Loved Him.

She doubtless had a woman's reason for marrying him. That kind of reason may not satisfy other people, but it is invariably sufficient for the feminine reasoner.

Sum Toms was what is called "wuthless" by his Texan neighbors. Old Bill Bunn, his father-in-law, himself not a very energetic or useful citizen, used to sit on the steps at the cross-road store and publicly bewail his sad lot in baying Sum for a member of his family. Bill had a dramatic style of delivery that was very fetching, and invariably impressed strangers as being very much in earnest. He would sit on the steps, silently chewing an enormous mouthful of to-bacco and apparently listening to the conversation of his co-loafers. If Sam's name was mentioned, he would give vent to four or five little falsetto squeaks, which found egress through his nose; then he would draw in a long breath, puff out his fat cheeks, purse his mouth, and give a beavy whistling sigh; this would be followed by a large quantity of tobacco juice, carefully aimed at some object in the vicinity These preliminaries accomplished, Bill would rise to his feet, thrust one fat, dirty hand into his shirt front, wave the other in a sweeping gesture as he lowered his eyes and rolled his head sadly from side to side, and deliver himself profoundly, after the following

"Ah-hum! That Sam Toms is th' laxiest, mos' shif'less, o'nery, triflin' cuss 1 ever seed—an' yere I've done got 'im f'r a son-'n-lawr. Hm-hm-hm!' Another whistling sigh would close this peroration, and old Bill would resume his seat, still shaking his head sorrow fully.

And Bill was more than half right. Nominally, Sam was a cowboy; but most of the time he would tell you he was "jes' layin off a spell, t' rest up

He had always been just so-distinguished for laziness in an easy-going community, and nobody expected him ever to be otherwise; and it puzzled people immensely when energetic, capable Mattie Bunn accepted him for "reg'lar comp'ny," to say nothing of the sensation created by their wedding.

Mat, as has been suggested, probably had some reason for marrying Sam; but it is quite certain that she never told anyone what that reason was. Sam was tall, and big, and handsome in his carcless, slouchy way; he had always managed, no one knew how, to wear good clothes, too. These facts and his perennial good nature and friendly ways were the only points in his favor. Against him were the points so forcibly taken by his father-in-law, and, also, that he got drunk whenever he could possibly do so, and was morally so weak that anyone could easily lead him astray.

How Mat and Sam got along no one but Mat knew. Once in a great while, Sam would do some work and earn a few dollars. If he got home with it without stopping at the saloon, well and good. But, oftener than not, he would "drap in jes' t' take a nip 'r two," and that would settle it. At such times he would stay and buy money lasted. Then he would come home in a mandlin, tearful state of intoxication, and invent some tale to acville-January 31st, February 14th and 28th, count for his condition and the disap-30th, 1893. The round trip rate is but $50 she would look at the handsome scamp on dream—but, no, he was almost of which were a world of unshed tears. But she never complained-not the weary look might indicate ever so more useless and shiftless, trusting to his wife's ready wit and fertility of resource to carry them both over the bad

There were lots of bad places, too. Twice Sam ran into debt several dollars at the saloon, and Mat found some means to pay the debts-only herself knew how. But the second time she informed the saloon man that he must trust Sam no more. And, besides these Kailroad Company's personally-conducted things, to live—how did they do it? tours.

One day Sam left home for a ranch about thirty-five miles distant, where he had heard they wanted help. Two days bassed-three-four-five-and no word came from him. Mat was not a little worried, although Sam had often been away for two weeks at a time nautwithout sending word to her. But this An infallible remedy for the curs of time it was different; there was no exsatarth and deafness in all its stages, cuse for his not sending a message, as An impressionable young gantleman by one who has been a great sufferer the stage came by the ranch he had in a certain country town recently met gone to three times a week. Mat stayed to help her mother with the supper, and during the course of the meal learned that the two strangers were officers trailing a horse thief, who had stolen a valuable horse at a ranch forty miles east and sold it at Pickett Station, and who was believed to have come this way.

As she listened to the conversation a sudden nameless fear came upon her, making her feel faint and ill. As soon as supper was over she took her shawl and hurried home.

Somehow she was not surprised to find the door open. She entered hasti-ly. Sam was in bed asleep and breathing stertorously. He had evidently been drinking, as his clothes were scattered about the floor, and Mat, looking out the back door, could see his pony standing patiently where Sam had left him, waiting for some one to come and feed him. Mat leaned over the sleeping man and kissed him gently, her eyes full of love. Then she turned to pick up his clothes and put them away. The trousers were heavy, and something fingled in one of the pockets. Instinctively Mat thrust her hand into it and drew it forth clasping several gold pieces. As she did so her eyes opened wide and she stood as if stunned for a time, her heart chilled with the same strange fear that had stricken her awhile ago and impelied her to hurry

She rushed to the bed and shook Sam roughly. "Sam! Sam!-wake up!" she almost screamed.

The man turned over and looked at her stupinity. "H'lo, M-Mat! Yere, be Gimme kiss," he said, in a dull

"Not twell ye tell me whar ve done got these yere things!" Mat's voice sounded broken and shrill.

Sam sat up and rubbed his head, look ing at her in drunken wonder. "W-w'y, them-them thar, honey?" She shook him fiercely, and said, in a lower tone-a tone of earnest force: "Tell me, Sam Toms, whar ye done got these yere coins! Quick, now Her tone partially sobered the man whose eyes opened wider as he asked querulously: "What ye so all-fired fussy 'bout? hain't done nothin'." And he laughed in a balf-drunken, half-nervous way.

"Sam! whar did ye git 'em?" He sat dumbly staring at her. "Sam!" her voice was full of horror,

"did you steal that thar hoss?" No answer; but Mat saw by his eyes she had guessed the truth. Slowly the coins fell from her hand to the floor; slowly her head bent forward until her face touched the pillow. For minutes she did not move-not until Sam, who had been staring at her wonderingly, reached out his big hand and laid it caressingly on her head. Then she sprang to her feet, her hot eyes glaring. and her form trembling with anger and horror. She did not speak, but fixed her gaze on his face for a few seconds. He did not meet her look, and presently she turned and ran out of the door

Sam, almost sober now, called after her, but she did not answer. He got out of bed slowly and started to dress himself. He had almost finished, when Matt, accompanied by her father and the two strangers, returned.

"Thar he is-an' thar's th' money." she said, and passed on out through the back door, without looking at Sam.

There was a fail at the cross-roads; It was a primitive affair, but solid and substantial. It was a dugout in the side-hill, and had a heavy oak door and great steel hinges and look. It was plenty strong enough to hold a dozen Toms did not try to escape. He only curly head until he fell asleep. Then had all happened. It must be a drunksober, and knew where he was and how and why he was there. But-he could not understand. Had Mat-was it really Mat, who had given him up? There must be some mistake.

It must have been about one o'clock in the morning when some one silently entered the house of old Bill Bunn, constable. This some one entered by the back door, went stealthily into the room where Bill and his wife slept, rummaged about a few minutes, and then emerged from the house. It was a woman, and she had something in her hand.

Sam Toms was awakened, a little after this, by a rattling, jarring sound. He sprang up, just as the big oaken doors swung back and revealed the figures of a woman and two saddle-
