OBSE'S OBSERVATIONS.

What He Sees and Hears During His Travels.

If all people were as smart as they think they are this world would be fifty years ahead of its present condition. Unfortunately they are not, and to their discomfiture the fact frequently becomes known to the public through their own silly acts. While on an electric car the other evening I noticed a gentleman hand the conductor a coin. The man in uniform took the piece and after turning the coin over and over again, squinting at it from all points of view, he handed it back to the passenger and said, "That's not good. You can't come that on me."

"That is good for fifty cents, anyway," answered the gentleman, "and I have no other. I left my pocketbook in my rattle by mistake and it has gone to Mahanoy City by train," he continued in all seriousness.

"I'm sorry, but I can't take that money; neither can I afford to go down into my pocket for your fare," the conductor said.

"Let me see that coin," said a gentleman to the one in dilemma.

It was handed over and the party who had made the request, after hastily scanning the piece, added "here is a dollar for it."

The offer was accepted. As the conductor was taking the fare out of the dollar, his eyes bulged out with surprise, he asked the gentleman who had purchased the coin what it was. "It is a Columbian souvenir half dollar which can't be had at any place for less than a hundred cents."

"Oh! yes; I know what these coins are," exclaimed the conductor as he quickly dropped the change into the hands of the stranger and hurried out to the platform at the car.
