Political Points.

President Cleveland's rules as to appointments are queer, to say the least. "No editors are to be appointed"—yet the first postmaster to receive a commission was Editor Brown, of Meadville. "Persons who held office under Cleveland's first administration will not be re-appointed"—yes, later on, they can fill positions left vacant. He draws a line on Congressmen appointing their sons as their clerks, forgetting that members of his cabinet have and are putting in their sons.

A highly intelligent correspondent who has no interest in manufacturing, writes: "The booming of cannon throughout the country on the 4th of March, while intended as a manifestation of rejoicing for the triumph of the party of Free Trade, will prove in the end to have been the first signal gun of distress; heralding, we fear, a long period of darkness during which the potentialities of American enterprise and industry will be held to battle with the insidious advance of the commercial vandals of Europe, in that the heat and burden of the fight will fall upon the wage earner, whose employment it destroys. It is the saddest day the country has known for years."

The Bethlehem Times says Congressman Erdman is much annoyed by such corrupt suggestions. To an aspirant for office who offered to divide the revenue with Mr. Erdman, the Times quotes the latter as saying: "The government pays me $417 a month to perform the duties of a Congressman. Not if you would offer me $417,000 could you induce me to recommend you for the office you want. Go home, and never again, if you want anything from me as a Congressman, say one word about payment. With a greater desire to state a truth than to violate confidence the HERALD knows whereof it speaks when it says that if its readers could hear the hints of money to Congressmen for office, or see the letters, some with money enclosed, sent them, they would be astonished. The evil has assumed a shape so glaringly abominable that the corruptionists should be perceptibly squelched."

REV. POWICK'S RETURN.

Commencing His Third Year Under Favorable Auspices.

The pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church was greeted on Sunday by large congregations who cordially welcomed him for another year of service among them. As he entered the aisle he was welcomed by a burst of song by the choir. After expressing his gratification at being returned by the conference for a third year and expressing the hope that it might be the best and most successful of his ministry he announced as his text 2 Cor. 6-1.

"We then as workers together with Him beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." The text expresses the solicitude which the christian pastor naturally feels for the results of his labors. This solicitude arises from the relation in which he stands to God as an ambassador—representing God among men—and as a worker in the vineyard of the Lord yoked in fellowship with Christ. His conscious responsibility for representing God in such a way as to win man's loving allegiance to the Saviour intensifies His solicitude for the performance of His work. The salvation of man is the end and aim of God's administration in man's affairs; and the ministry, either human or divine, which fails at this point fails in the most important particular. As it is the chief glory of a lawyer to carry the jury and win his case, and of the physician to heal his patients and restore them to their place in society, so it should be the highest aim of the gospel minister so to present the truths of the gospel as to persuade men to become reconciled to God. The crowning glory of God will never be realized until the church is presented at last without spot or wrinkle or any such thing.

The text shows that we may enjoy the highest advantages to little or no purpose. "The grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared unto all men," but we are confronted with the solemn truth that it may be received in vain. The sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ and the ministry of reconciliation are in vain so far as the spiritual welfare of many is concerned. There are multitudes who live under the shadow of the sanctuary and the sound of the gospel who are not apparently profited by either. And grace is sometimes denied the right of way in hearts that receive it so that it fails to accomplish all that it might. Corinth enjoyed the ministry of St. Paul for one and a half years, and of Apollos for an unknown period, yet see from Paul's letters how much of evil survived. It is not the advantages one has but the use he makes of them that determines his value in the scale of either learning or morals. The cooling draught will do as much for the thirsty soul if conveyed in a tin cup as it would if poured from a golden chalice, so the grace of God—regardless of the special vehicle in which it may be conveyed—depends in great measure for its efficacy upon the spirit with which it is received and the heartiness with which the recipient cooperates with it. The parable of the sower brings this truth out clearly. The sower sowed the same seed in the stony and thorny ground as in the good ground. The difference in the result was owing to the differences in the soil and not to differences in the seed. The seed which fell by the wayside was as good as that which fell into the ground. To the differences which result from the operations of divine grace upon the hearts of men are owing to the manner in which it is received. Let me entreat you not only to be reconciled to God, but being reconciled and made actual possessors of God's saving grace, to let the grooves of the spirit also and in your life that all may see that you "receive not the grace of God in vain." The past year was a good one but the present one upon which we now enter may be a better one if, instead of feeling flushed with victory and resting upon our laurels, we "forget the steps already trod, and onward urge our way."

That old established cough remedy, Downis Elixir, still more than holds its own in the public estimation, despite sharp and active competition. It is a "home remedy," and in this locality needs no word of praise from us, so well and favorably known is it. It is the standard remedy for coughs, colds and all throat troubles, with great numbers of our people, and their continued use and unsolicited recommendation of it speaks volumes in its favor.—Barrington, Vt., Free Press, January 26, 1892.
