Novel Safety Test.

William Leckie, a former townsmen, now inside superintendent of York Furn colliery, has invented a safety lamp test which is the most unique and practical ever heard of. It certainly is the first ever produced in a coal mine and it is safe to say that it will be universally conceded the greatest appliance contributed to the fund of scientific engineering in recent times. The test consists of a small glass case connected with a pipe that conveys the gas from a vein at a point not far distant. There is a valve in the pipe where it joins the case, and when it is turned to be tested the gas is turned on. The lamp is placed inside the case which is charged with the deadly explosive, and the action of the flame is slowly watched. An explosion would only lift the loose glass lid, causing no other damage.

THINGS HONORABLE.

An Interesting Sermon by Rev. William Powick.

The sermon in the Methodist Episcopal church on Sunday morning was from Cor. 8:2: "Providing for honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord but also in the sight of men."

These words were written by Paul with reference to his administration of the "poor fund" committed to his trust and they show the scrupulous care he employed in the smallest matters in order that he might avoid the possibility of suspicion regarding his good name. He did not presume upon his apostolic character to excuse him from the exercise of those rules of common prudence which the business sense of the world has imposed upon all who regard their reputation among men. His example is very full of instruction. Notice first: He "provided," that is, he deliberately planned his life so that its various parts might be worthy of himself, his calling and his destiny. What a lesson for those giddy, thoughtless, careless souls who enter upon the responsibilities of life and face its solemn obligations without a serious thought of their accountability to both God and man. If the architect of a material temple finds it important to have a plan and to thoughtfully supervise its execution which more should we, who are building for eternity, be solicitous to fashion our spiritual house according to the divinely provided plan. In a word, it requires that we all be Methodists—in fact if not in name. How sad to see so many who have little or no sense of responsibility for honorable dealing but are more anxious to live high and to dress well than to demonstrate a character for sterling integrity.

The embezzlements which are so prominent a feature of modern life are frequently the result of a want of thought and care to wisely adjust one's wants to his resources. Embezzlement is only the terminus of a railroad which is carrying multitudes of passengers from the town of Thoughtless-careless. Many of its passengers get off at way stations, but when once aboard some, who never intended it, are driven by force of circumstances the full length of the road. The beginning of such a career is in that covetous desire of the flesh, inhering in all, to get as much as possible for as little as possible. We see it in the boyish game of marbles played not for fun but for the sake of the spoils of victory. We see it continued in the passion for sharp trading in which each desires to gain the advantage, and farther on in those innocent domestic games of chance in which stakes are put up as an incentive to win and so on down the entire list which gives birth to the mania for gambling which has seized all classes of society. The remedy for these things is to be found in an inflexible purpose to take thought for things honorable. A man whose word is not as good as his bond is a rascal. It thrills my soul to think of man created in the image of God and qualified for fellowship with him, an heir of heaven and designed for a home in its many mansions. But then to think of him groping the neck-beap in quest of the foolish toys and empty follies and fading treasures of this world makes me feel like calling him of to take thought for things worthy of his highest destiny and his noblest powers.

Notice again that Paul's methods sought the approval of both God and man. There are two classes of blunders right here: Those whose plan of life leaves God out of the account and those whose plan leaves man out. And it is not easy to decide which is worse. Some seek only the honor which cometh of men. They may be the very soul of honesty so far as their dealings with men are concerned but they do not scruple to rob God of all that is his, careless of the fact that they leave as little right to rob God of titles and offerings and worship as to rob man of titles and offerings and goods. Then we sometimes find those who say "God knows my heart, I don't care what man thinks," careless of the fact that they have as little right to disregard man's opinions within certain limitations as to disregard God's. It makes no difference what rascal's may think of my views of temperance but it does make a difference as to what man think of my character. When reputation is gone influence is gone. Paul found the perfect unity of goodness in "taking thought for things honorable, not only in the sight of the Lord but also in the sight of men."

The Great Sabbath.
Yesterday was Shabbath Ha-pulot (the Great Sabbath). This name was given to it as it comes before the great festival of the Passover, which marks the national birth of Israel. On this Sabbath the prophetic lesson is read by some congregations from the concluding part of the Book of Malachi, and in accordance with a custom prevailing universally among Israelites, sermons were delivered in all Synagogues, as they are also on the Pentecostal Sabbath, occurring annually just before the great Day of Atonement.
