LIQUOR TROUBLES.
It is a dull day when something does not happen in Kansas to interest the rest of the world. The Populist fight ended for the time, one with the House man has begun, headed by the Governor.

Fort Scott is close to the Missouri line, and however scarce anything else may be in Missouri, whiskey is always plenty and cheap. It was impossible, therefore, to keep the people of Fort Scott from temptation. So by vote of the prohibition law, the Mayor and Councils determined to license certain houses and raise a revenue off which could not be prevented. Upon the licenses the Governor has made war, and with a vengeance. The penalties will bankrupt the accused, and those who cannot pay them have the prospect of spending most of their remaining days in prison.

In Leavenworth a shrewder scheme was adopted. That town is still over to Missouri, the river only being between the two states. The Mayor there invented a scheme by which the law was defied with impunity. He selected certain men and said to them: "You can open saloons, but you must not put on signs, and must avoid everything which will excite the radical temperance people. At stated times I will have you arrested and fined. The fines shall not amount to more than a stiff license. In this way we can obey the law while violating it and raise some money off liquor." That was done and it was generally understood.

Soon after the prohibition law was enacted experience showed that its enforcement could not be trusted to the local authorities, and the Legislature directed the Governor to appoint Commissioners where needed. The schemes in Leavenworth were sanctioned by the Commissioners there. In Fort Scott the Mayor and Councils made the mistake of ignoring them and openly defying the law. The Commissioners could not stand that, and made their appeal to the Governor.

CLEVELAND REFORM.
The appointment of Mr. McAdoo to be Assistant Secretary of the Navy shows the character of President Cleveland's civil service pretensions. When this position was created a few years ago a tacit understanding existed that the incumbent should not be removed on account of a partisan change in the Administration. The Secretary of the Navy is usually a civilian, and the idea of providing an assistant for him was that he should have some responsible person constantly at his side who was perfectly familiar with the practical details of the naval service and department.

Influenced by this understanding, Professor Seley resigned a life position at Annapolis to accept the appointment to the newly created office. His politics did not enter into the matter. He was known simply as a man of signal aptitude for the place and of long experience in naval affairs. This selection more than justified expectations. It was naturally supposed, therefore, that Professor Seley would be undisturbed by the new Administration.

On the contrary, he is one of the first to feel the edge of the Cleveland ax. He is successor in a New Jersey politician, whose sole recommendation is a few years' service in the House of Representatives. The Cleveland variety of "civil service reform" is about the most complete humbug in existence.

ALL OF THE IMPORTANT EVENTS

Railroads Consolidated at Erie.—Smallpox at Reading Rapidly Disappearing.—Morganstown to Have a Glass Factory.—A Young Lad Cremated in a House at Wilkes-Barre.

HARRISBURG, April 1.—Secretary Edge of the State board of agriculture, has notified of the outbreak of swine influenza among the live stock at Mr. Collins' farm, at Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland county, and will have it done to investigate its nature and cause, and if necessary take measures to prevent its spread.

The symptoms, as stated to the board's Westmoreland county agent, are not such as would enable Secretary Edge to recognize the malady, nor do they agree with those of any recognized disease. The animals are characterized by shortness of breath, and the lungs are filled with a bloody mucus. The secretary is also supervising the instruction of a number of horses near Indiana, Pa., afflicted with the glanders. The contagion has been in the neighborhood for some time, and it is uncertain how many animals have been infected.

The directors of the Common Pleas Terminal Company met in Council and signed an agreement for consolidation with the Erie, Shenandoah and Lake Erie Company and now similar action has been taken by the directors of the Erie Terminal Company. The accounts, he says, are kept in a careless and negligent manner and the commonwealth is thus wronged out of a large amount of money to which it is entitled. The data regarding accounts as furnished him, Mr. Arnold says, make amending a law and in suits these statements for the information and further action of the auditor.
