refusing to appropriate the sum of $5,000 per year for its maintenance. It can now do well to abolish the state account, anyhow, and costs about one neighbors in foreign lands. hundred thousand is year. It can save the "hundred thousand" by going into desustude-"innocuous desuctude" we mean. Delaware abolished civilization when it refused to drop the whipping-post. As for Jalls and prisons, it has been said! that it is necessary to keep a guard, outside to pick up the prisoners who roll out of hed and through the holes in the walls in the night. But wel doubt that:

Probably there is no need of a militia in Delaware. If trouble comes the authorities can move over into Pennsylvania or Maryland and sleep in peace. For years Pennsylvania has maintained the Delaware criminal class in its jails and prisons, because if arrested down there they manage to slip away and over the line. Thus eral reign of pandemonium awakened Delaware saves a good deal of money every year by lending its thieves to its neighbors. But we do not want them. We prefer not to read in the papers that some Delaware jail has had a general delivery over night, knowing that our police reports will show an increase of cases within twenty-four hours. But as Delaware was once the and the of remsylvania, we have a tropolis of the west presents to day a gi-allight feeling for its people, and can-gentic pandramma of glittering splendor, not find it in our hearts to complain such as has never before been presented to when what was a part of us tries to save a little of the cost of government.

THE female barnyard fowl is forgiven for making the same fuss over one chicken as over a dozen. Similarly we suppose some of our contemporaries the decerations in general are far more may be excused when they exploit the slow of the dedication of the World's Fair offers of a hundred thousand in gold buildings last October. The Lexington by western banks to the Secretary of lotal, where President Cleveland and his the Treasury. But such offers, apart from the indication that the banks and structure in the city, over $2,500 hav-stand ready to assist in maintaining ing been expended in the effort to make it our various currency at par with gold, outshive all its neighbors in point of beauty really effect nothing. It is not the and design. gold in this country, held as reserves by banks, that must be depended upon to replenish the Treasury. The reserves of the banks are only for the reinforcement of the Secretary, not for of others, to be the first to reach the obhim to draw against, except in a great jetsive point and witness the grandeur and magnificence of the most extensive under smergency. It is the gold exported taking ever attempted.

The event of the day was the starting in the event of the machinery in the legal tender notes for gold is simply motion the wheels of the machinery in the various buildings inside the park. The exercises connected with this event took ary without affording certain relief.

It is exactly as if a man should undertake to liquidate a floating debt by another. The legal tender notes exanother. The legal tender notes exchanged for gold so far have probably not, they will be in short metre. blan exposition, why is had been under-taken, the success the enterprise had met with on every head metrosciple. What the Treasury needs is a supply of gold drawn from aboard, because, saide from what we produce, that is the only way to increase the country's stock of gold. The gold we still have a well enough where it is. It is part of the reserve. The gold we have exported is what we want back, and we shall have to take measures to reclaim it in such a way that the pressing liabilities of the Treasury shall not be increased. The fact that the hundred million fund has been trenched upon need not alarm anybody. It is there to be used.

President Cleveland, after performing the distinguished task of setting the mashinery in motion, held a reception in liberal arts hall and shook hands with all who could push their way through the crowd and get close enough to him to do so. People tumbled over each other in an affort to grasp the president's hand and give it a genuine American shake. But the crowd was a very good natured one and no one got angry because he hap-pened to be jostled about by the immense

A Source of Wenderment. Wender upon wonder appears to the ad-miring gaze of the visitors to Chicago, who must at last conclude that all the marvel of the world and the products of all the muster geniuses in art and invention are gathered here to delight and instruct—a gathered nere to delight and Instruct—a very panorams of the possibilities of human ingenuity and persistent effort. But not only is the visitor entertained by exhibitions which mark the attainments of the century, for on every side he beholds things which connect the present with memorable events of the past. On a point jutting into the lake he present with the lake he present which is the past. the lake he perceives a quaint old convent smiling at the waters under its feet. It is Rabida, where good father Perez received Columbus and little Diego and supplying them with food, also nourishes the ambi-tion that founds its fruition in the discovtion that founds its fruition in the discovery of the new world. There it is, the very reality, and below are the estuny of Palos, the flowing Odiel and the teating sea. Everything, seemingly, save the great navigator, his plous counsellor and the physician, Hernandez, the trio in whose memory America owes more than the na

But there are other reminders no less volceful will the story of Columbus, for here we see the counterpart presenti-ment of the Santa Maria, the Nina and the Pinta—the three little vessels that bore the first navigators across the waters of a boundless sea. Every detail is true, every sall, most, anchor, timber and rigging is identical with the original; and thus 400 years after their momentous voyage we are able to inspect fac-similes of the caravels and form a correct estimate of the courage which Columbus must have pos-sessed, and the mighty strength of his con-
