GOOD BY, VERAGUS. You can tell Spain much bigger tales of this New World than your ancestor did four hundred years ago.

It is said that Governor Altgeld, of Illinois, used 17,000 words in his letter explaining why he pardoned the Anarchists. And yet few persons will be satisfied with his reasoning.

WHETHER the progress of cholera in Europe has been checked for good is not yet clear; but it has not made the advance that was expected of it. The fear that it will reach our shores is gradually passing away as the season advances.

In several Illinois and Indiana towns the people have hanged and burned Gov. Altgeld in effigy. Is the gubernatorial friend of Anarchy quite certain that he has felt none of the scorching through that tough hide, of which he boasts?

The Republicans of Williamsport, propose building a new club house for $25,000. Evidently the lumber city Republicans are not dead and have not lost faith in their party. They are willing to show their faith by their works and use of their money.

THE death of A. J. Drexel was all the more a shock to his many friends because of its suddenness. As the founder of the Drexel Institute, he wisely chose to give a portion of his wealth to a worthy cause in his lifetime, and he will long be remembered for qualities which dignify humanity, no matter in what walk of life they are manifested.

FOX three or four years doctors have been discussing whether the Keeley bi-chloride of gold cure of drunkenness was a humbug. In the mean time while they have been discussing Dr. Keeley has amassed, it is said, $10,000,000 with his cure. If this be true, it shows both how many drunkards there are in this country and how earnestly they or their friends desire their cure.

"Let them pitch in, and give me the devil if they want to, they could not out through my hide in three weeks with an ax." This was an expression of Governor Altgeld at Springfield, Illinois, Tuesday, when asked by a reporter if he had anything to say in relation to the criticisms made upon him by the press for turning the condemned Anarchists free. This is truly a remarkable Governor, and what is peculiar about him is that he is a foreigner of the average free thinking type.

DURING the four years of the administration of General Harrison the aggregate amount of gold sent abroad was $101,901,000. Since the election of Grover Cleveland, want of confidence in the Democratic party has taken $85,000,000 of gold out of the country. As soon as a bill is made with the foreigners the cash is demanded. Under Republican rule, foreign money flowed into this country for investment, and American securities found purchasers on all the foreign bourses. Now the money is being called back, and our securities are a drug in a foreign market. The desired change has taken place with a vengeance.

EULALIE has left America's shores carrying with her the good will of the American people. Her last act almost was to give emphatic refutation to the fake stories about her relations with Mrs. Potter Palmer and other Chicago people, to express her admiration for those with whom it was said she had had differences. These utterances of hers were in accord with the lady-like and sensible conduct which has been characteristic of her sojourn here, and which earned her the respect and good feeling of our citizens. The visits of Eulalie and of the Duke de Veragua have done much to dispel the unfavorable estimate of the Spanish character generally held by American people. The cruelties of Cortez and his followers are largely responsible for that estimate, and they have long been looked upon as typical of the Spanish character, the fact that centuries have elapsed since the days of those old warriors having not been properly discounted. On the other hand, Spaniards will doubtless be inclined henceforth to look more favorably on our people, so that the interchange of courtesies in the case of these distinguished visitors is likely to have most important results.

ON GETTYSBURG'S FIELD

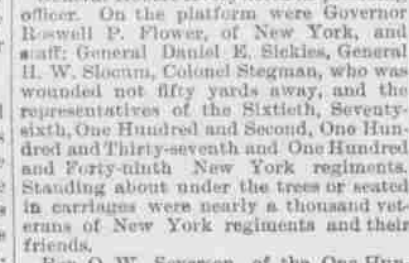

The Monument to New York's Unknown Heroes Dedicated.

MILITARY CHIEFTAINS PRESENT.

General Sickles and General Slocum unite with the Veterans in Doing Honor to General Greene, the Oldest Survivor of the Great Battle.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., July 2.—With bright sunlight above and the field on which Gettysburg's decisive battle was fought stretching out below, New York state's handsome monument to the heroes who fell in the fight was dedicated yesterday with impressive ceremonies. It was the great day of the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the three days' fight. Seven thousand New York veterans, the governor of two states, the surviving generals of the battle and the thousands of veterans and visitors from other states were present to lend impressiveness and moment to the scene, and this day will go down in history as one of the greatest at Gettysburg since the wheat fields ran red with the blood of Confederate and Union dead.

The first feature of the day was the reception to Major General George S. Greene by his brigade on Cat's Hill. A platform had been erected among the trees where Greene's men held the most important point on the right of the line of battle of the second day's fight. Within view of GENERAL SICKLES. score of monuments erected to mark the place where comrades fell, the survivors and their guests gathered and saluted their brigade commander, who is in his 83d year, and is the oldest living participant in the battle of Gettysburg.

General Robert A. Avery acted as presiding officer. On the platform were Governor Russell P. Flower, of New York, and staff; General Daniel E. Sickles, General H. W. Slocum, Colonel Stegman, who was wounded not fifty yards away, and the representatives of the Sixtieth, Seventy-sixth, One Hundred and Second, One Hundred and Forty-ninth New York regiments, standing about under the trees or seated in excursions were nearly a thousand veterans of New York regiments and their friends.

Rev. O. W. Severson, of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh New York volunteers, opened the proceedings with a prayer. The veterans then sang "America." General Avery then introduced General Slocum. The veterans listened intently as General Slocum described the scene in which they took part, and gave his heartiest cheers when he closed General Greene then stood up and was cheered and cheered again, as many of the veterans saw their leader for the first time since the war.

When General Slocum concluded Governor Flower was introduced. He said it was not on the program for him to speak at this time, but he could not forego the pleasure of coming and looking into the faces of the men from New York state on the ground where they fought so well for both state and nation. He said that as

GENERAL SLOCUM. time rolls on the lines which these men drew from Culp's Hill south to the gulf and from Savannah to Washington will become more and more distinct and it will be still more clearly established that they fought in the best army and for the best cause that have ever existed. Continuing he said:

"While the soldiers of the old world fight to make their monarchs greater, you fought to make your enemies your equals in all things, and to enable their children to enjoy the blessings of this country equally with your own. This was the turning point just here, and you may all consider yourself as lucky to have been in it. I wish to God I had been there myself."

There were loud shouts for General Sickles as Governor Flower took his seat, and the general was given a hearty cheer as he stood with the aid of his crutches and congratulated the veterans on getting together on the old battle ground.

After all had joined in singing "Marching Through Georgia," an Rev. Mr. Tracy had pronounced the benediction, all the veterans formed in line and shook hands with Generals Greene, Sickles, Slocum and Avery, while Battery C, of the Third artillery, fired a salute. Many of the old veterans walked on with tears on their cheeks after the hearty hand claps of their old commanders.

After the morning exercises there was a rush to the hotel and eating houses, where the crowds were fed with difficulty, as the hotels were simply swamped. At 1 o'clock the veterans went to the places assigned to them for the parade. The organizations formed on the four sides of Town square and along Baltimore street, their lines reaching all the way to the cemetery gate. The generals and guests of honor entered carriages at 1:30 p. m. and took their positions in the square. The Soldiers' Home band, from Bath, N. Y., led the procession.

First came the honorary march on General George S. Greene, and staff, escorted by twenty-five men of his old brigade. Following them were veterans bearing twenty-nine flags of honor, out of respect to the memory of commanders of brigades or higher command in the battle of Gettysburg, who were killed during the battle or are since deceased. Following the flags of honor came the grand marshal of the day, Major General Daniel Butterfield, who was chief of staff of the Army of the Potomac during the battle of Gettysburg. Next were the regulars acting as escorts of honor to the generals, the governors, the commissioners and invited guests. The column started at 1:45, and passing

IN A BAD FIX.
 The startling sight which met a Hon. Vivant's gaze next morning.

Here is a story which, according to the New York Sun, was a favorite in the repertory of a famous Cincinnati:

"On one occasion," he was wont to say, "a friend of mine had been on a terrific spree which had been occupying his nights right along for two weeks or more. He managed somehow to be on deck during business hours, but when night came he was down in the hold and everywhere else. One morning he awoke heavy-headed, half-dressed and lying crosswise of the bed. When he had gone to sleep or how he did not remember. There was the odor of stale beer and wine and tobacco smoke in the room, and bottles and cigar butts were scattered all over. By a great effort he got to his feet, and for an instant his head felt as if it would fall off and burst into a million pieces. He cast his eyes around the room. As they fell upon the foot of the bed they encountered a grim and grinning monkey sitting on the rail. There was no known reason why a monkey should be there, but there it sat and grinned. He watched it intently as he slipped over toward a table where lay a loaded revolver. He was very, very rocky, but he had grip enough to hold the gun, and with a sudden movement he had it trained on the animal. He was a famous shot, but the monkey never wavered. It simply sat there winking and grinning. My friend held the pistol down on it for a second, steadily.

"Now," he said, nervously, "if you are a real monkey, you are in a bad fix"—then he hesitated a moment—"but if you are not," he went on, "then I'm in a bad fix."

"He banged away, and it was ten days before he was himself again."

DUMB ANIMALS SHED TEARS.

The Teaching and Pathetic Way in Which a Horse Solits Sympathy.

Many people believe that horses do not weep, but those who have had much to do with these faithful creatures know that on several occasions they will shed tears as well as express sorrow in the most heart-breaking manner. In the west, where the hardness of the ponies causes the riders to almost overlook the necessity of providing for their needs, it is quite common, when the weather is extremely cold, to see an unblinded pony tied up for two or three hours when the temperature is nearly zero, and while its owner is transacting business or getting drunk. In this case the suffering is evidenced by cries which are almost like sobs, and the unmistakable tears freeze onto the cheeks like icicles. When a horse falls in the street and gets injured the shock generally numbs his senses so much that it does not hurt any or groan, but under some conditions an injured horse will collect sympathetically in the most distinct manner. I remember a favorite horse of my own, writes a correspondent of the New York Telegram, which trod on a nail long enough to pierce its foot. The poor thing hobbled up to me on three legs and cried as nearly like a child in trouble as anything I can describe. The sight was a very touching one, as was also the crippled animal's gratitude when the nail was pulled out and the wound dressed.
