ABSOLUTELY

NOT A "DEADLY TROLLEY." And It Will Evidently He Some Time He fore It Is Displaced.

[Special Correspondence.]
Newank, N. J., July 17.—Frequently we read of accidents the accounts of which are headed "The Deadly Troller." Nothing can be more absurd. There is nothing deadly about the trolley. The pressure maintained upon the circuit is quite insufficient to produce death. It is possible to receive a stock from the wire great enough to throw some people from their feet, but not strong enough to make the produce feet produce from their feet, but not strong enough to preduce feet, preduced to the produce feet produced to the not strong enough to produce fatal results.
It is a singular fact that a horse receives much more injury from an electric shock than a human being. A shock that a man will hardly notice will often throw a horse to the ground. The power to receive a shock differs greatly with different people.

Some will receive with no land effects.

shock which will cutirely unnervs others. Yet public sentiment is so strong in opposition to the trolley wire that efforts are now being made to device means whereby the trolley wire can be successfully laid in a conduit under ground, thus not only re-moving all source of danger, but the dis-

As yet no great success has attended such efforts. Experiments with storage bat-teries to be carried by the cars themselves have also been in progress for several years, but for reasons hereafter stated they also have proved inefficient.

The storage battery consists of several closely perforated lead plates placed paral-lel to each other in a glass jer, which is filled with very dilute sulpharic soid. Contact between these plates, which rest upon gutta percha cylinders in the bottom of the jar, is prevented by a leaden framework, which rigidly holds together each set of plates. Two sets of plates are placed in the jar so that each plate of one set falls be-tween two of the other.

The perforations, which are usually square, in series, and quite close together are filled with oxide of lead, or litharge. This substance comes in the form of a straw colored powder and is a combination of metallic lead and oxygen, the well set of plates for some time through the The exygen from one set of plates will pass to the lltharge of the other, forming, by the action of the current, spongy lead on the first set and red lead on the other. If the two sets of plates are now connected, a current of electricity will flow until the plates return to their first or normal con-

To obtain the requisite power to run an electric car at least 100 or more of these as they do such a large amount of lead, they are extremely heavy and add much the weight of the car, which necessitate an expensive, well ballasted roudbed. With the trolley system cars may be run over old horse car tracks, considerably reducing the cost of construction. The storage bat tery also requires close care and attention and frequently has to be carried to som aution where a current can be obtained to

However, the main difficulty is the unre liable character of these batteries. The elates are not to curl up and buckle ing contact between plates of different sets and rendering the battery useless. This may occur in the best makes after very little use, while others may last for quite awhile. A corrosive and disagreeable gas rises from them, especially when being charged.

Altogether the use of storage batteries has been found unreliable and expensive, and until some new method has been used with practical results the trolley wire and
