debate was worthy of a born diplomat. The sub-committee held an all night sension without being able to arrive at any own judgment and be responsible for the consequences. Some of the silver extremists were in favor of an out and out disap-proval of the President's recommendation in his special message and of a declaration for free coinage at the ratio at 18 to 1, but in the end pacific counsels prevailed, and it was agreed to practically straddle the issue by indorsing the financial plank of the last national platform. "Tariff reform" is to be the hattle cry of the Democracy in the campaign. Within an hour after Neal's nomination his sup-porters were sporting badges with the in-scription "Neal and tariff reform." To the representative of the United Press Mr. Neal said:

"I regard the nomination of Mr. McKin-ley and myself as a declaration of the two political parties of Ohio that the tariff issue must be fought to a fluish. Political death to McKinleyism—that is the issue. The president has declared that this issue must be dealt with in the near future, and upon that declaration and as against the high priest of high tariff, the voters of Oblo are invited to a verdict. At the same time state issues will not be lost eight of. The Democracy must work out its own salvation in this campaign. The Republi-can party cannot depend upon past ma-jorities to carry it through this contest, for present conditions appeal directly to the intelligence and hard common sense of the laboring and industrial classes."

Cincinnati, Ang. 11.—Lawrence T. Neal is realizing the truth of the old adage that "all things come to him that waits." For eight years in pursuit of the highest office in the gift of the Ohio Democracy, so energetic and persistent that he had almost come to be regarded as a perennial candidate, he suddenly finds his ambitions gratified, and that without even the semblance of a struggle. With the field against him, lacking organization and able lieutenants, lacking organization and able lieutenants, he led from the start and cantered under the wire a comfortable length in advance of his closest competitor.

Even up to the moment of the calling of the roll his prospects looked unfavorable, but the opposition was disunited, if not absolutely demoralized. Neal might have start until late in the afternoon.

College Professors on the Stand in the Shann Case.

MERCURY IN KIDNEY AND BRAIN.

According to Professor Cornwall, of Princeton, This Poison Had Seen Constantly Administered - Professor Wormlor Also Discovered Mercury.

TRENTON, Aug. 10 .- The third day of the Shann murier trial opened with Professor Theodore G. Wormley, of Philadelphia, on the witness stand. He is a medical expert, and fills the chair of toxicology and chemistry in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. When it was suspected by the criminal authorities that young Shann had been put to death with poison, County Physician Cantwell secured ortions of his brain, kidneys and other parts, and sent them to Professor Worm ley for chemical analysis.

The doctor was on the stand a long time describing in detail his experiments and tests, exhibiting the results, and comment-ing as he went along on them. His analysis of the organs was very thorough, and the result was the discovery of mercury. No traces of arsenic were discovered.

Henry B. Cornwall, professor of applied chemistry at Princeton college, testified that at the instance of County Physician Cantwell he examined young Shann's biadder and portions of his brain and other parts of his remains. He found small quantities of mercury everywhere. He could not say in what form the mer-cury had entered Shann's body. Professor Wormley said that the potson he found was sufficient to kill. The potson found by him in the kidney and brain pointed to its continued administration to the patient rather than a single dosing.

The witness was subjected to a long examination on his knowledge of the absorp-tion of mercury by dead bodies, the effort of counsel being to show that the mercury found in the organs was due possibly to the fact that the undertaker used enloyid of zinc on the body. The witness would not admit that dead bodies could absorb poison that way, but if they did it was not likely that the kidneys would absorb it, to the exclusion of the other organs. Carrie Pyatt, a colored woman, who used to work for Mrs. Shann, said she visited the family about a week before John's death and saw him in bed while she was the latest advices from Apia, order has been completely restored in Samoa. As a result of a conference between the son, putting her knees on his arms as if to pin them down. The witness said: "Mrs. Shaun, don't give him his medicine that You ain't got no spoon, Better raise his head." "That's right, Caddle," John exclaimed. "don't let them force any more down me. The witness said nothing and neither did Mrs. Shann poured the medicine down John's throat. He kind not asked for the medicine. He had asked for water and his mother said: "Well, I'll give him his medicine new."

Under cross examination she denied she had any feeling against Mrs. Shann, or that Mrs. Shann had discharged her. She had discharged berself, after telling Mrs. Shann what she thought of her.
William Bartino, a drug clerk, gave testimony regarding the filling of prescriptions for the Shann family.
