A FOOLISH AMERICAN.

He Floats the British Flag on a Brazilian Vessel.

BELIEVED TO BE PAUL BOYTON.

The Famous Swimmer, if it be He, Arrested by British Naval Officers and Turned Over to the United States Minister for Action.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—A spate of international interest has been injected into the situation of affairs in Brazil through two incidents that may lead to some complications. The first of these is based on the action of merchant vessels, flying the Stars and Stripes, in furnishing provisions to the rebel fleet which threatens Rio Janeiro.

The other is best explained by the following cable messages received by the secretary of the navy from Captain Pickens, commanding the United States steamer Charleston, at Rio:

"Boyton, a United States citizen commanding a tug floating a British flag, arrested by British men-of-war and delivered to me. Had terms on board, presumably to attack insurgent ship. Shall send him home."

Secretary Herbert replied, "Hold Boyton until further orders."

The suggestion is made that "Captain Boyton" mentioned in these despatches is probably Paul Boyton, the diving suit man, who has been mixed up in similar affairs before.

Contrary to the general belief it is now stated that the state department has been in almost uninterrupted telegraphic communication with Minister Thompson since his arrival in Rio Janeiro. It is learned that in one of his telegrams Mr. Thompson reported that merchant vessels were furnishing the insurgent fleet with provisions, and he asked for instructions with reference to the American vessels engaged in this practice.

It is understood that in reply the state department has directed the minister to caution captains of the American merchantmen against giving stores to the belligerents, the United States not having recognized the rebellious faction. Whether American vessels have actually given provision to the rebels, and if so whether the government of Brazil, if it be successful in the present trouble, will ask for an explanation, perhaps something more, from the United States, are questions that can not now be considered in any other form than as mere surmises.

On the face of it the Boyton (or Boyton) incident would appear to be important, but opinion in official circles differs as to its gravity. A majority of the questioners on the subject are inclined to think that it will not amount to anything. The construction placed on Captain Pickens' telegram at the navy department is this:

A tug of the Brazilian government, flying the British flag, attempted to blow up an insurgent ship. The commander of the tug, a United States citizen, was arrested by British officers on the charge of piracy in showing colors under which he had no right to sail, and was turned over to the United States naval authorities for conveyance to the United States for trial. In support of the assertion that Boyton, or Boston, is a pirate, naval officers point to an act of congress of March 3, 1819, which authorizes the president of the United States to instruct commanders of the public armed vessels of the government "to seize and send into port any vessel, the crew of which shall have committed, or attempted, any act of piracy upon any vessel of the United States or of the citizens thereof, or upon any other vessel," and it is held at the navy department by prominent officials that the words "attempted any act of piracy upon any other vessel," clearly proclaim the offense and the authority of the commander of the Charleston to hold Boyton a prisoner.

But at the state department, where the matter has been examined with some care, it is said that the incident is not at all serious. Boyton had been captured on suspicion of intending to commit an assault on one of the rebel ships, and had been, through courtesy, turned over to the United States commander for whatever action the United States saw fit to take in his case. It is stated that no severe punishment could be inflicted on Boyton, and that neither Great Britain nor Brazil would attempt to hold the United States responsible for the matter, and furthermore, that even if it be shown that Boyton's tug was in the service of the Brazilian government while floating the British flag Great Britain will not be sufficiently interested to demand redress from Brazil. The only present cause for apprehension that trouble will ensue in the matter is the suggestion that if Boyton is in the employ of the Brazilian government the Rio authorities may demand his release.

Vigilant's Formidable Competitor.

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—Lord Dunsraven's challenging yacht Valkyrie went down the bay yesterday for her second trial spin in this country. A powerful breeze blew from the north-northwest, covering the bay with whitecaps, and the cutter seemed along like a race-horse. The cutter, when she came over the waves, or rather through them, for her keel was out of choppy seas like a knife. On a stretch where she could be timed she covered the distance, nine miles, in one hour and one minute.

Tillman Denounces Lynchings.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Sept. 29.—In an interview on the recent lynching of a negro at Aiken for murdering Governor Tillman, it is that it is inexcusable, as a court was in session and the negro could have been hung according to law. Rape is the only crime for which lynching is justifiable. Lynchings are caused by delays in trials, but they are being carried too far. Governor Tillman is in favor of speedy trials as a remedy. He has urged this upon the state legislature.

LIKE RATS IN A TRAP.

Terrible Drowning Accident in a Michigan Iron Mine.

TWENTY-EIGHT LIVES SACRIFICED.

The Men Were at Work Under a River When the Roof of the Mine Caved In. Only Those on the Lower Level Succeeded in Escaping.

CRYSTAL FALLS, Mich., Sept. 29.—With a terrific rush the water of the Michigan river broke through a bed weakened by mining into the Mansfield mine, drowning twenty-eight men who were at work directly under the cave in. There were forty-six men in the mine when the accident occurred, but eighteen of them who were working in the lower levels managed to escape.

The names of the drowned miners are: Sam Peters, James Strongman, W. H. Pierce, Charles Pohl, Ole Carson, Joe Kohla, Swan Johnson, Mike Harrington, Frank Rocko, Al Torressio, Frank Johnson, Sam Johnson, Shellie Zadra, Peter Perry, Nicola Fontana, John Heston, John Holmstram, Ross Fortinamo, John Klebe, John Randala, John Warner, Oscar Landquist, John Arcauago, Arto Stefano, August Colonna, O. Constanti, Vigilia Zadra and Celesti Negri. The first six were married and leave large families.

None of the bodies have been recovered, and it is believed it will be necessary to divert the channel of the river before they can be secured.

It is believed to have been the worst disaster that ever occurred in the Lake Superior iron region. When the night shift was on duty it was noticed that more water was coming into the mine than usual, but no alarm was felt. The men at the pumps, as they managed to keep the "drifts" free. The miners pursued their work as on every night when they started in to pass the twelve hours under the ground. Suddenly a few minutes after there was a loud report and overpressure rush of water, and the men felt themselves being overwhelmed by an avalanche of mud.

So fast came the flood that it is doubtful whether the men on the upper levels had time to drop their tools and run for their lives to the old shaft. Had any of them reached the perpendicular opening, however, it would have availed them nothing, for the shaft known as "Old Number One" collapsed as soon as the water reached and undermined its base. This occurred at precisely 9:30, and it was then known to those in charge of the mine that the men in the upper level had been trapped and drowned by an accident which had long been expected. Had there been time the men might have descended by some means to the lower levels and crossed over to No. 2 shaft, but the rushing flood came too fast and it is thought that most of them met death within five minutes after the break occurred.

The men at work in the lower levels were warned in time to escape. A few minutes after 9 they heard an ominous roar and at once suspecting the cause dropped their picks and fled for their lives. The water, pursuing as it did the devious course necessary in running from one level to another, was already ankle deep in the lower levels when the men reached the shaft and were drawn up from what seemed certain death.

The news of the disaster spread on swift wings throughout the little hamlet and a wild cry of alarm was voiced by the inhabitants as they rushed from their homes and gathered about the shaft just as the last one of the eighteen men was brought to the surface. Whether the cause of the accident was explained to the anxious inquirers a cry of horror went up as they realized that the long expected and much dreaded accident had taken place at last, and brought with it the toll so long feared by the wives and mothers.

There was a call for volunteers, which was at once answered, to descend the only available shaft and see if possible any miners who might possibly be found alive. But the courage and strong intent of the hardy miners was of no avail, and the waters had already reached the lower level shaft, and the angry roar which greeted the would be rescuers as they perched over into the dark chamber at once presaged all hope of rescue, and the twenty-eight men were given up.

The death of these twenty-eight men marks the end of Mansfield mine, for unless the river can be forced to seek another channel, the body cannot be secured, nor can this rich deposit of iron ore be worked again.

The Mansfield mine is situated on the banks of the Michigan river, about six miles east of Crystal Falls, the county seat of Iron county. It has been worked between three and four years, and has shipped about 900,000 tons of Bessemer ore. It was owned by the Michigan Iron & Lumber Co. of Marquette, Mich. Sept. 30, John M. Longyear, of this city, is one of the chief owners of the Mansfield property. His belief is that the disaster was caused by "robbing" the mine. That is, by working in a reckless manner and taking down pillars of ore in the upper levels that should have been left to support the roof. The mine inspector of Iron county will conduct a most rigid investigation.
