There are a good many panie stricken and enutious people in Virginia who would like nothing better than to give the Democracy a blow to the neck.

> Ir would be difficult to conceive of any enterprise of whatever magnitude and however difficult of accomplishment that would not be made a success if undertaken in real live earnest by the American people. No better illustration of this could be desired than has been given in that wonderful achievement-the World's Fair. It not only astonished ourselves, but it has astonished the world also, and has extorted from foreign nations a universal expression of admiration, however unwilling they may have been to make such a concession. To have withheld it would have been to stultify themselves, for the meed of praise was so well merited that to have withheld it would have been prima facie evi dence of a disposition not to deal fairly with us. But there has been no such withholding. The great Fair has closed, and the universal verdict is that it was in all respects a marvelous
