CONGRESS AT-LARGE, Hon. GALENIA A. GROW, OF BERKSHIRE COUNTY.

THE "PENNSY."

One of the evidences, perhaps the greatest of the necessity for the general curtailment of expenses on the Pennsylvania Railroad, says the Evening Item, of Su bury, is manifest in the diminished traffic that has been noticed during the last few months.

A great deal of thoughtless criticism has been indulged in on account of the reduction of time made by the Pennsylvania company but when the facts are known it will become apparent to every one that it was dire necessity and not the pleasure of the officials that caused the reductions.

No one outside of the management of mammoth corporations can realize the strain that was felt when a large volume of income dropped off suddenly as was the case last summer and fall.

As soon as confidence is restored in the country factories and mills will be fired up, their products will begin to move, railroad traffic will again assume its accustomed hum.

LITHOKALANI need not worry as to what form of amnesty she should grant to the Provisional leaders. The chances are not one in ten thousand that she will ever have the opportunity to grant amnesty to any one.

REED VERSUS COCKRAN

An Oratorical Tilt Between Two Great Party Leaders.

BOTH FAVOR THE WORKINGMAN.

And Both Prove to the Satisfaction of Their Respective Partisans That Methods Entirely Opposite Will Bring Prosperity to the Land.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The consideration of the tariff debate under the five minute rule was begun yesterday. A stirring debate occurred over the question of procedure, the Republicans insisting in their right to offer amendments alternately with the Democrats, but the chairman ruled that Mr. Wilson, representing the committee, had the right first to offer amendments leading to the perfection of the bill.

Only three amendments were disposed of, none of material moment. The attempt of Messrs. De Forrest and Sperry, Connecticut Democrats, to secure the adoption of an amendment increasing the duty on Struntra elgin wavers to the present rates was defeated.

The day's debate concluded with a brilliant tilt between Mr. Cockran (N. Y.) and Mr. Reed (Me.). These two leaders crossed swords in one of the most interesting verbal duels of the debate, and when they finished each side claimed the victory.

Mr. Wilson had offered an amendment to add to the free list sweat leathers and other hat trimmings. Mr. De Forrest (Conn.) supported the amendment, which he said affected the hat makers of Danbury.

At this point Mr. Payne (N. Y.) made a statement, which led to the most interesting scene of the day, and finally culminated in a verbal duel between Mr. Reed and Mr. Cockran. Mr. Payne declared that protection enabled the manufacturers to pay high wages, and while it might be true that they would not pay high wages of their own volition, labor unions enabled labor to exact high wages.

Mr. Reed Takes a Hand. "Your argument was exhausted by Jack Cade hundreds of years ago," interposed Mr. Bontelle.

At this point Mr. Reed, the leader of the minority, took the floor. "It is strange," said he, "that with all the eloquence possessed by the gentleman from New York he should resort to that which is merely physical. The gentleman wants to know why the unemployed are wandering about the streets when the McKinley law is in operation."

Mr. Cockran interrupted to say that he referred not to the McKinley law, but to the long years during which the protective system had been in operation. At the end of that time when the suspension did come he said it was extraordinary that employers should have all the profits and labor should be working the streets.

"That is precisely what I was calling attention to," continued Mr. Reed. "You give a reason and state a fact. By present conditions I might charge the unemployment of the Democratic party. Prosperity has been arrested by the threat of another

Mr. J. H. Stillman

"I am Truly Thankful For Hood's Sarsaparilla. During the war I contracted typhoid fever, and fever and ague, leaving me with malaise and nervousness, and from which I have suffered ever since. In neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous prostration and general debility, since I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I have not only a day's work in three months, but I have more than for years and am in better health than any time since the war." J. H. STILLMAN, Cheltenham, Pa. HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA.

Wood's Pills Cure Liver Ills. 25c. system, not by the continuance of the present one. "There is an immense amount of unconsumable wealth in any country at a given time is exceedingly limited. When the strike of the coal miners occurred in free trade England the laborers were immediately reduced to the condition in which they are today. There was great distress and suffering. The gentleman says wages depend on the law of supply and demand. That theory is long since exploded. They depend on the condition of the market. You would say that you propose to extend the market. But how? By giving up our own market to seek another. We do not want to give up our home market and enter into a struggle with the cheap labor of the world. We want to retain our own market and elevate the condition of our own labor.

"This is a selfish world. Labor is trying to get all it can and capital is trying to make all the profits it can, but in this great struggle we must not forget that at the base of it lies the fundamental principle that both are struggling to have their wants supplied. Wages are the growth of the desires and wants of the laboring man. By labor unions, by combining, by making the manufacturers understand that they must give good wages, they are procured. The success, good fortune and prosperity of American labor does not depend on those who read the heavens with the psalms, but on God omnipotent."

The applause on the Republican side and in the galleries was deafening when Mr. Reed said down. "The conclusion of the gentleman's argument," replied Mr. Cockran when order was restored, "illustrates its beginning. The beginning of too much tariff reform is physical, the conclusion of the protective argument is purely spiritual. The gentleman understood the idea when his party was laid to rest, and his final reliance was in the goal of hosts. I would like to take up the Republican position as set forth by his speech. It is, if I understand aright, that we should enrich the manufacturer by giving him protection against the lower civilization of the world, and then raise the condition of labor by organizing against him. Am I right?" he inquired.

Mr. Reed rose slowly to his feet and remarked emphatically that what he said would be fortified into any such statement. No Charity to Commuters. Mr. Cockran asked Mr. Reed several times to restrict his position, but the latter refused, and Mr. Cockran proceeded. He could not make the distinction, he said, between consumable and unconsumable wealth. All wealth, he thought, was consumable. The basis of wealth was in the capacity to produce. You cannot save unless you create. When you make a dividend you give you limit his power. He agreed with Mr. Reed that there was no such thing as charity in commerce. The survival of the fittest is the survival of the cheapest. As we are able to produce cheaper the providence of God declared that this country should complete the economic conquest of the world. There was no room for charity in commerce. He had never heard the law of supply and demand challenged before, but he was willing to leave this dispute to that issue. If the contention of the other side that wages were not dependent on the law of supply and demand were true then they were right; if untrue, then we are right.

The hour of 5:30 having then arrived the last amendment of Mr. Wilson was agreed to, and a recess was taken. At the night session Mr. Powers (Vt.) opposed the bill and Mr. Boen (Neb.) and Mr. Hudson (Kan.) supported it.

Sullivan Calls Them "Daisy Sprinters." BALTIMORE, Jan. 16.—John L. Sullivan said in an interview: "This last letter of Cobett's, in which he says that Mitchell is a coward and had to be forced into the match, and had to be forced out of meeting him since the articles were signed, is all bombast. Mitchell is no coward and I believe he made the match in good faith and will carry it out. The fight will last fully twenty rounds, which will take little over an hour's time, that is provided they do not sit too much of the sprinter act, in which they are both daisies."

Skilled Lace Workers Successful. WILKESBARRE, Pa., Jan. 16.—The long strike at the Wilkesbarre Lace works is ended.
