BETTER PAVEMENTS

Chief Burgess Burns announces his infuntion of strictly carrying out the ordinances pertaining to the laying and repairing of pavements and has made a start by notifying the land agent of the Philadelphia & Rending Coal and Iron Company to put payements on the company's properties in town. With the coming of more propicious weather there should be a general move in the direction of better sidewalks. On many of the principal thoroughfares there is a marked neg-Egence in this matter. This may be, to a certain extent, accountable for by reason of the winter weather. Now that spring omes on upace let the good citizens further abet the efforts of the Chief Burgess in the administration of his calling and incite a move for improved pavements by looking after their own.

A MAN named Harris has discovered and successfully developed a process by which he converts old steel rails into good, first-class iron. He has located in Sunbury and organized a stock company to manufacture this new process of iron. The company has secured the old mill in tont town and on Wednesday last the first experiment in that mill was made, It proved successful, and it is thought that the process can be operated to pay nicely. The great advantage of this new process is that all the worn-out steel rails can be used to manufacture iron. The steel is decarbonized and turned back into iron from which it originated.

Tue Pottsville Republican takes occasion to devote considerable space to an explanation that it is not disappointment over failure to receive patronage that prompts its attacks on the county officials, and the explanation makes a story calenlated to win applause but for one omission-truth. It has been notorious for years that no newspaper in the county has prospered as well on the test of 19th he patronage as the esteemed Republican. It has almost serviced states:

"THAT man that both a tongue," says Shakespears, "is no man II with his tongue be cannot win a woman." Colonel. Breckinridge has the tongue and won the woman with H; but, when his treatment of the women is taken into consideration. he doesn't appear to be much of a man,

The Evening Herald. A WAVE OF SYMPATHY.

It Comes to Miss Pollard in the Celebrated Trial.

A GUILTY MOTHER'S SACRIFICES.

She Put Her Children Away from Her at the Command of the Man She Loved. Mr. Breckinridge's Lawyers Admit the Secret Marriage with Mrs. Wing.

Washington, March 31.—When the shrill voice of the balliff eried adjournment in the bare old elecuit court yesterday afternoon the veiled face of Madsline Pollard was buried in her arms upon the rough board top of the witness box, be-hind which she had sat for three days. The only sound which had broken such a silence as seldom falls on a court room was a sobbing that seemed to come from her inmost heart. Three jurors were fumb-ling in an uncertain way with their handkerchiefs, the judge was staring toward the ceiling abstractedly. Even the law-yer whose cross-examination had led up yer whose cross-examination had led up to this passage were a look of unwonted gravity on his fatherly benevelent face with something remarkably like moisture about his eyes. If there was a man among the curious hundred in the court room the curious hundred in the court room unmoved he was unconspicuous in the majority of sympathetic faces. Madeline Pollard had been telling the most tragic episode of her unhappy life.

"A woman can't do more than that for a man, more than give up her child for him," she had said. "I laid my baby in its coffin because it needed the mother's care I could not give it; because he made me put it away from myself. I never let me put it away from myself. I never let him see me cry over it, because—"

The sentence was unfinished, and no more questions were asked. The men trooped from the court room awed from their customary charms of speculation and criticism.

All day she had retained her composure up to this close, telling her story with such remarkable clearness of language, such a perception of the strong light which certain phases would throw upon her case that gentlemen experienced at the bar were constrained to comment that she was either telling the truth or was the most constitutate actress who had ever come uniter their observation.

The trial reached its climax early in the afternoon, when Judge Jere Wilson, fac-ing Major Butterworth, had thrust at him direct the question whether his ellent admitted the secret marriage to Mrs. Wing in New York, and had, after a flery passage at arms, received an affirmative answee. From that crucial point the testimony of the plaintiff regarding the turbu-lent days of pistols and promises following the secret marriage on the 28th of April abounded in the most sensational incidents of the entirestory.

From the questions prompted in part by the Kentuckian it developed that following that marriage, on the 29th of April, Colonel Breckinridge had poed at the Hoffman House with Miss of ollard, registered as his daughter, that she had threatened to shoot him there, and be renewed his promise of marriage; that she had taken him from the presence of his wife in Wash-ing to the office of the chief of police, where he had again promised to marry

The plaintiff's attorneys raised the contention that the secret marriage consti-tuted the breach of promise on which the suit was based, and that all following events were irrevelent and to be excluded from consideration, but the point was overruled. Most of the day up to the final interesting hour had been consumed in reading the letters of Miss Pollard to James Rhodes, calling upon him for money, and although interesting points were raised the subject had been comparatively lifeless.

In her testimony Miss Pollard asserted with great carnestness that the letters acut by her to Khodea which were intro-duced in evidence had been dictated by Mr. Breckinridge, the idea being to con-ceal the relations existing between him-well and Miss Pollard. She was a passive party to the arrangement because of her desire to shield Mr. Breckinridge, To a reference to her mother as "the agency of deception" in the Rhodes correspondence Miss Pollard objected. "Poor dear mama,"

Abos Pollard objected. "Poor dear manna," long and are ensue short of that."

Another question asked the plaintiff by Mr. Buiterworth was: "Miss Pollard, you had bor of embroide liner and under suit yesterday that your relations with but practical one. Voluminous lan

"Did you believe there was nothing be-Colonel Breckinridge and Mrs. He told me that she was a very worldly woman, and I certainly became suspic that he should spend twelve days with a worldly woman."

"Miss Pollard, did not you and Colonel

Brecktaridge have some scenes about this "Oh, yes," she cried scornfully, "Hiswith that man couldn't be all happiness to everybody. In answer to further questions Miss Pol-lard said she had never had any ambition to become an actress, as "only pretty women go on the stage. A plain woman would have no chance there." Her recital of the visit to Major Moore, Washington's chief of police, varied slightly from Major Moore's account of the affair. Speaking of a letter in which Mr. Breekinridge had written a solemn pledge of marriage, she was interrupted by Mr. Butterworth ask-lug: "Have you that letter?" Alias Pollard raised her arm impressively

After the letter was written, and before the 17th of May, Miss Pollard continued, Colonel Breckinridge had sent har flowers, had frequently talked to her of their fu-ture married life together.
