SOUTHERN HATRED.

The Atlanta Journal is Hoke Smith's paper. Mr. Smith is the gentleman from Georgia whom President Cleveland made Secretary of the Interior, with instruction to see that the pen donroll was reduced by 100,000 names during the first twelve months of his term. The rendiness with which Mr. Smith, of Georgia, and also of Atlanta, Ga., and also chief proprieto: and director of the Atlanta Journal, en sered upon his task of pensioner-batting his "suspension on suspicion only" of 12,00 pensions in two mouths, and the flere indignation caused throughout the North by his acts are fresh in the memory of all It also is fresh in the memory of all how the indignation of the people compelle Congress to limit the power of Smith, o Georgia, etc., by passing an act that de stared a penoton to be a vested right and how the courts sustained the Congress found act as a constitutional measure.

Since then it has been pleaded in miti gation of Smith's nets that of himself he has no unfriendly feeling toward soldier of the Union but that as a subordinate of the President he was compelled to obey

We regret the discovery of direct evidence of the permanent hatred of Smith, of Georgia, toward all members of the Union Calling to mind that it is twenty-nine years since Lee made "unconditional surrender" to Grant at Appomattox, such revivals of the old-time bitterness as the re-publication in Hoke Smith's Atlanta Journal of date of March 6, 1894, of this scurrilous acrostic on the Inte General Benjamin F. Butler seems to be an aggressive waving of the Southern "bloody shirt:"

Demember the monator, thou vilest of senni. In the same issue we find an article laudatory of a Dr. Massey, "who lately less moved to Atlanta from Douglasville." the Massey's deed of morit was that when Sherman's army entered Milledgeville, and when the half-clad soldiers of the Union confiscated a supply of blankets that had been left by the retreating Confederate army in a building used as a small-pox nuspital over which Massey had presided, the wretch kept them in hyporance of their infected quality. We perfer to quote from Hoke Smith's Atlanta Journal: The soldiers awarmed Into the city, and nothing except the sick escaped them. They entered Stetson's Hull and seized sugerly upon the small-pox clothes and and badding, and Dr. Massey was too good a Confederate to make them any

He had done very little notive killing of the enemy, but he was willing to kill some of the bluccoals in a roundabout

He was enrious to hear the end of the story, for all he knew at the time was that Sherman moved on to Savannah from Milludgeville.

The doctor then, for the first time, had and the last chapter in his small-pox story General Sherman and his soldiers were doubtless puzzled about the origin of the disease, but had they known the secret of Stetson's Hall they would have had their eyes opened long ago.

Thus it was that Dr. Massey gave an army the small-pox. This scoundrel, too cowardly to "take part in the active killing of the enemy, but yet "good Confederate enough" to disseminate a contagious plague among the roops that he dared not oppose in arms, s commended by Smith, Cleveland's Secre tary Smith, to the favorable notice of the scople of Atlanta.

A Choctaw Indian or an Ashantee warrior is too chivalrous a being to regard an act like that of Massey with other feelings than of loathing. President Cleveland choose well when he selected Smith, of Georgia, as his administrator of a Union soldier hating policy.

TALES OF INTRIGUE.

Mr. Breckinridge Continues His Interesting Testimony.

PLAINTIFF FLATLY CONTRADIOTED

The Case Narrows Down to a Question of Veracity Between Miss Pollard and Her Aged Paramour-Her Threats to Take

Washington, March 31.—Chapter two of the story of Colonel W. C. P. Breckin-ridge was told yesterday. It consumed the whole session of the court, and still the narrative remains incomplete. It was a wearying experience for the Kentucky congressman to stand all day in a narrow congressman to mand all day in a narrow stall detailing step by step the history of a decade of his life, so far as it had any bearing upon his illicit relations with Madeline Pollard, whose movements were smiangled with his so often and so in-tricately. From their second meeting at the Lexington house of assignation kept by Sarah Gres, in 1884, down to the late spring of 18-2, the recital wound its way along a path stormy with pistols, illegiti-mate children, concealed meetings, clanmate children, concealed meetings, clan-destine luterviews and one secret marriage. Miss Pollard persists in becoming agitated, and once she made an outery, demanding to know why the defendant could not tell the truth, but Judge Bradley warned her firmly and kindly that she must exercise control or leave the room.

The case is practically narrowing down to a question of veracity between the plaintiff and several of her supporting witnesses and the defendant. Their stories coincide on many points, but it is notice able how differently the same events appear when viewed from the standpoints of Colonel Breckinridge and Miss Pollard.
Only on a few points was he obliged to take issue with the testimony of anybody but the plaintiff.

Mr. Butterworth handed the witness a work basket which had belonged to his second wife and which Miss Pollard said he had given her. Colonel Breckbirdge said in regard to it: "The statement made by the plaintiff was that when I left Washby the parallil was that when I is a vasi-ington after the session of congress I went with her in the Herdic to the train, that I gave her the basket then 'with affection-ate words,' I did not go to Miss Pollard's house that night. I did not ride with her in the Herdic to the depot. I did not give her the basket under any dircumstances."

The witness said that he did not know how the basket got into the possession of Miss Poliard. Colonel Breckinrings then told of the visit to Sarah Gesa' house in August, 1884, with Miss Pollard, and said to the bask of the pollard, and said the bask of the pollard, and said that he had not seen the latter again until October. He denied all knowledge of the October. He denied all knowledge of the correspondence to Rhodes, alleged to have been written, dated from New Origans and other places in the south, by Miss Pollard under his direction, nor had he ever written a letter purporting to be from her to her mather or any other retson.

"From November, 1885, to July, 1887, there were no improper relations between us, although I was supporting her," the witness continued. "The entanglement between us really began when she came to Washington against my will. She would come to me at the Capitol, in my committee room, declare that she was not going tee room, declare that she was not going to leave, that she was going to have the apport I owed her."

His visits to Sarah Gess' Lexington house, he said, were first suggested by Miss Poliard. He had rever called to make such arrangements. He offered no inducaments to the plaintiff, though he had of course paid the necessary expenses, had of course paid the necessary expenses, and had given her some change for traveling expenses. Beturning to the plaintiff's appearance at Washington be said:

"I said that their must be no misunderstanding between us, and reminded her that from the first I had said there could be no marriage, but anything short of that which I could do to save those who loved me I would do; that she could not trust me, because knowing the relations I had held with her while I had such a happy family she would always suspect me of having similar relations with other women. I reminded her that she had not come to me a maiden, that I had not seduced her," duced her." Colonel Breckinridge gave his version of the visit to Mrs. Blackburn. Witness said to Mrs. Blackburn that she had been extremely kind, and that so long as the plaintiff had her as a friend she needed nothing else, but that in her distress he had offered her the protection of his name. Mrs. Blackburn said that this had been a great surprise to her, and she could scarcely credit it, and did not know whether she should congratulate him or

noi. To this he had responded nothing, simply acknowledging it with a bow. After speaking of visiting Philadelphia as the guest of George W. Childs, the secret marriage to Mrs. Wing in New York was skipped, and Colonel Breckinridge went on to tell of his meeting with Miss Pollard at the Hoffman House in New York May 1. On that occasion she threatened him with a revolver, but he finally subdued her by threatening to send her to the Then Mr. Breekinridge told of his secre Then art preckurings one of his secre-marriage to Mrs. Wing and of the falling out with Mrs. Blackburn. Mrs. Black-burn said that he had told her that he was sugaged to Miss Pollard and asked her to keep the secret, and that witness and plaintiff had been together in a hotel in New York. He had replied that he could not give her a full explanation then, but would later on in Washington. Mrs. Blackburn and said that unless he could md. He had said that he supposed h must submit to her decision whatever it

Colonel Breckinridge then told of the visit to Major Moore. He stated that Miss Poljard declared her Intention to kill him, and he went with her to Major Moore's of has to relate the elecumstances and have the major decide whether he or Miss Pol-lard should be arrested. At her request

After leaving the office with Mas Pollard he had sold her that there could be no more terms between them, that she would have to look to some one else for support, and that he did not intend to give her another sollar.
