THIRDEDITION

DO YOU WISH A GOOD SINT

"We must eat to live."

The health of the body and life itself depend entirely on a suitable diet. When people do not get enough food or live on an improper diet, sickness is the inevitable result. Proper neurishment is the secret of health and strength. The great question of health is, therefore, what is a

This question might be answered in three different ways and yet each answer would be correct. In the tropics, it would he right to say that the proper diet for mankind is almost entirely vegetarianthat is, fenits, vegetables and grains. But in America, which lies in the great temperats sone, a mixed diet is found to be the best. The healthlest people, in this country, live on meat foods, vegetables and grains in suitable proportions. Such a diet is founded on reason and it ought to be healthy.

Theory and practice, however, do not always agree. There are thousands of people who eat plenty of good food and yet remain weak, unnaturally thin, pale and puny. They have no strength, and are continually complaining of tired feelings. Their great trouble is that while they eat suitable food they do not get sufficient nourishment. They do not digest their food properly. So they keep thin and keep getting thinner. Lack of nonrishment soon wears them out.

It was formerly the custom to advise such people to take oils and fats, but persons with weak stomachs can no more digest cod-liver oil than they can digest fat pork. The effect of either is to make them dyspeptic and billions. And that is why advanced physicians now refuse to prescribe cod-liver oil. Medicated wines and so called stomach "bitters" are equally useless. They only inflame the lining of the stomach and give no nour-

The recognition of these great principles of diet and nourishment has led to one of the most brilliant discoveries of the present age. It has completely revo-Intionized the treatment of dyspepsia and emaciation. Instead of trying to cure indigestion with medicines and oily mixtures, people are now finding out that the only way to get relief is by obtaining sufficient nourishment, and that this nourishment is speedily gained by taking Paskola, the artificially digested food. This great discovery has caused a decided sensation for some time past, and the fact that Paskola is becoming so wonderfully popular is the best proof that it has

THE ESCAPE.

"I presume you refer, dear," he replied, levingly holding her hand in his, "to our wedding trip." "You have guessed it, you dear, sweet boy," she cried joyfully, "and let's declife where we will go, "Let no see," taking out his notebook, "There's Niagara and Washington and Old Point Comfort and."

"Parhaps you would like to go to some real quiet place." he continued, "where we could be all alone by ourselves. But, my darling, what is the matter with you? You are not ill, are you!"
Her face had become ashen pale. Controlling herself by a suprome effort, she said. "Can you not guess'it? Don't you see where I want to go." And she whispered something in his ear.
