THE LION HUNTERS.

NOT PURSUERS OF THE KING OF BEASTS, BUT OF CELEBRITIES.

All Done to Feed the Vanity of the Leo

Formerly the Hons in the amplitheater ate the Christians. New the so called Christians eat the Hons, mangling them first. They live on Hon. It is a lonely trade among the tribe, for no one Honhunter loves another lion hunter. The Mrs. Lion Hunters of fashlonable fame have enormous capacity for their celebrat-ed food. There is not much left after they are through for the poor little hunters, and consequently there are fights sometimes, called rows, and now and then bon food called rows, and now and then hon food disagrees. It does not always assimilate, especially after the hons leave.

To be a king of gentus is pleasant no doubt to have instituted a right to the royal succession, to be unhesitatingly erowned, to be that especial appinage of royalty, flatterers kneeling at one's feet, is an agreeable recreation. No one would allowed decline the search. royalty, flatterers kneeling at one's feet, is an agreeable recreation. No one would willingly decline the scepter. Poets, musicians, idealists, love flattery. We all do. The human mind can bear a great deal of it. But kings are sometimes allowed to eat alone. They have their hours of retiracy, but how many hours are allowed to the kings of genius? Read the letters of Dickens and see how he detosted the lion hunter. Just ready to die of that overwrought brain which gave up its lifeblood that we might be annued, we selfishly demanded those sacred hours which he should have given to repose for the gratification to our overvanity that it might be said he was to be seen at our parties.

Mrs. Leo Hunter—his own immortal creation—stands as the head of a class of whom we have many examples, a class who deserve such an appellation and portraiture.

tic neighbor of hers said: "Why, if Goethe should come to Bugaboo, she would say if she met you in the street: 'Come in this evening. Wolfgang is coming.'"

In thus calling the Hon by his Christian name this intimacy, which such a phrase indicates, his a part of that assumption for which Mrs. Lee Hunter is famous.

The great man is her Intimate friend! Women are weak on this point. They like to shine with reflected light. They are anxious that other women should see them admired, followed, flattered.

Many of them are content with this redous that other women should see them admired, followed, flattered.

Many of them are content with this reflected glory. If they cannot stand in the real sunshine of a real celebrity, they like the glitter of a tin reflector. Anything is better than nothing. A tallow candle can cast a glory. The fate of a prima donna who has the charm of social adaptability and who does not eat with her kuife is a hard one. Every one wants her for a ball, dinner, to a or breakfast because somebody else has had her. The actor or actress who can claim the distinction of the salon has to keep a book. There is a rumor that Irving said he was "engaged every Sunday for two years," but jovial actors are not famous for keeping their on gagements. When Mrs. Lee Hunters grow too intensive, they shake a mane and scatter their admirers as the real lion shakes off theylowdrops.

The musical lion is a very much to be pitied animal. From the appearance of Paderewski's mane (some one said he

The musical lion is a very much to be pitied animal. From the appearance of Paderewski's mane (some one said he looked like a new variety of chrysanthenum), he has evidently not given away many locks of his hair, but he has been bored. When he wearly goes out of the Anditorium theater at Chicago, with 50 young lodies following him breathless with advention, how pitiably he shows disgust and fatigue! His very trade requires repose and solitude. He is a composez. He needs his leisure hours to himself, but when once the prey of Mrs. Leo Hunter wee be unto him! He must be chained to her charlet when she drives abroad, and he must play for her when she wishes. The hon is of no consequence, What does she care for him? But Mrs. Leo Hunter's vanity is of much consequence, and it

No, Mrs. Leo does not rake over the sacred ashes of the "feu sacre" from a spirit of reverence. No; that fire might burn to heaven and consume poet, author, musician; she would not care. Did not its performed logs leave a fragrant residuum behind, out of which dust she could make powder for her mou

We must remember that the dread conditions of genius are that the mortal man who carries the load of a great brain is weak. We must not so bore him as to be chilged to add compassion to admiration. The sensible flor has a growl for Mrs. Leo Hunter and a paw with which to push her away. He does not hesitate to abuse her after he goes home.

Men are often lion hunters, liking to be seen with great men. Hos well has almost made this class reputable by writing an immortal biography. But they are not lovely to look at these toadies, no matter how great the lion.—M. E. W. Sherwood

There is a story—one of the numerous, unyombed for narratives that float about the capital—of a rather amusing adventure which Mr. Garner had with a young man of Washinghan, who may be called Cholly, not because that is his name, but because it sounds like him. At the clock in the evening, a little fate, the Cossacks who had been acting as the imperial besty guard, attired in their long, blue runies, with good facings, took up their positions along the cypress streets route from the palace, all carrying lighted teches, unbiling a world scome.

route from the palace, all corrying lighted torches, unaking a world scone.

The precession of white robed clergy then emerged from the church and formed in line across the path. The bells began tolling, and soon afterwards the sound of children singing hymns were heard in the distance. Then through the darkness the glare of the torches carried by the guards marching on either side of the cuffin could be perceived.

As the funeral procession approached the church their forms were thrown in relief against the blackness of the night by the light of the torches.

by the light of the torches.

A sharp word of command, "Present arms," broke the solemn stience, and amid the muffled rolling of many drums, the procession entered the church path, headed by sailors carrying lanterns and banners and followed by the choir children dressed in white surplices. They were followed by the clergy, and then came the ceilin, surmounted by the imperial crown and borne by Cossacks.

Behind the ceilin were the eger and the
