Without question it was the most im-portant day in the history of the Lexov committee. Schmittle erer's confession i profife not only of sensation, but of evi dence which confirms and verifies what have been hitherto considered the most ex-agreerated deas of police and official cor-reption. It deals with more than indi-vidual cases, for it shows the criminality that has pervaded the police department.

Captail Schmittbegger is under indict ment for bribery. He had previously re-fused to testify before the senate commit-tee. On Thursday, however, he was re-arrested and his ball increased. The news that Schmittberger had con sented to test all he knew spread through the city with the speed of a whirlwind and drew to the committee room a vast throng of citizens who clamored and struggled for admission. In political and official circles this intelligence created a furore.
