MEN INJURED IN A SLOPE.

They Had Reached the Top in Safety When a Mistake of the Engineer Threw Them Down.

Two Italian miners employed at the Wm. Penn colliery were badly injured at the top of one of the slopes in the mine Saturday night, through a mistake of the hoisting engineer. The victims are at the Miners' Hospital, and they are in a precarious condition.

Joseph Olivetto has a contract to drive a tunnel in the mine from the bottom of the Buck Mountain slope to the Mammoth vein. At about ten o'clock Saturday night the hoisting engineer, George DeSilva, received a signal to hoist men up the slope. There were four Italians on the wagon. They had been working on the night shift for Contractor Olivetto. Two of them were in the car and two, Peter Satora and Louis Bergen, got on the spreader. The engineer hoisted the men at the usual speed for cars containing miners and everything went all right until the car got to the top, or knuckle of the slope, when it suddenly plunged forward and the two men on the spreader were thrown under the car.

Fortunately the car was stopped before it crushed the men to death. Satora was injured internally and Bergen had a leg broken.

The engineer was unable to give an explanation for the accident and he was suspended. It is supposed that when the car reached the knuckle he put on full force of steam, instead of shutting it off.

HAD A GOOD TIME.

The Local I. O. O. F. Degree Team's Fraternal Visit to Ringtown.

The degree staff of Shenandoah Lodge No. 591, I. O. O. F., went to Ringtown in sleighs on Saturday evening and paid a fraternal visit to Ringtown Lodge, No. 287. They were heartily welcomed in a number of short speeches, which were ably responded to by the gifted speakers, Elmer E. Johnson, Harry Huntzinger and Matthew Perkins. That matchless orator, David P. Williams, won the approbation of all by maintaining an eloquent silence. The staff had a highly enjoyable time and in the course of the evening rehearsed some of its work, receiving warm praise for the manner in which it was conducted. After completely wrecking a turkey supper with much noise and confusion, the team departed for home at a late hour. The team was made up as follows: Henry L. Jones, Elmer E. Johnson, Thos. Lathien, Harry Huntzinger, Jeffrey Williams, David P. Williams, William Draper, Samuel Davis, John Willingham, Thomas Edwards, William T. Evans, Edward C. Davis, William Thomas, Thomas Evans, Jesse Hughes, Robert Anderson, James Bees, Matthew Perkins, Samuel Shone, Edwin R. Williams, Degree Master, John D. Trezise, organist.

COURT REPORTS.

A Day Fixed for Some of the License Cases.

Special to the HERALD. POTTSTOWN, Jan. 21.—The only part of criminal court in session is that in which the case of ex-Steward Emerich is being tried and the case is still on trial.

The civil court term was opened to-day and there was a large attendance of the legal profession to receive decisions in cases argued at the last term. No decision was handed down on the motion by the defendant in the case of the Shenandoah HERALD against the borough of Shenandoah, and the Evangelical church case remains with the court.

In the case of Patrick Higgins against Nora Jennings the court affirmed the judgment of $50 granted by Justice Dengler. This was an action for trespass and a nuisance sustained by the Jennings family on the adjoining property of Higgins, on South Jardin street, Shenandoah.

The court has fixed next Monday to hear old applicants for saloon licenses against whom remonstrances have been filed and new applicants for old stands. No day has been fixed to hear applicants for new stands.

Boiler Gives Out.

One of the boilers in the West Lloyd street school building gave out on Saturday and the heating of the building is now dependent upon one boiler. This service will be sufficient if the weather does not become severe. In such an event it will be necessary to disburse some of the schools until repairs can be made. The boiler had only been in service a little over a year.

RAILROAD RUMBLINGS.

A Narrow Escape at the Lehigh Depot Yesterday.

SAVED BY THE CONDUCTOR

A Brakeman Loses a Thumb While Coupling Cars—A Broken Rail Struck by a Train Near Audenried.

A Pole named John Bosowicz, who attempted to board a passenger train at the Lehigh Valley depot yesterday afternoon, to go to Mt. Carmel, almost succeeded in going to that place a mangled corpse. The prompt action of Conductor Reeves saved the man. Bosowicz arrived at the depot as the train was starting. He attempted to jump on the front steps of the first car and his foot slipped. He had hold of the platform railing and this caused his body to swing around between the car and the engine's tank. Reeves, who was standing on the car platform, grabbed the man by the arm and pulled him around to the steps as he was about to drop to the track. Had the Pole fallen nothing could have saved his body from being crushed by the wheels.

Harry Taylor, a freight train brakeman, lost the thumb of his left hand Saturday afternoon while coupling cars at the Lehigh Valley depot. Dr. Hamilton temporarily dressed the member and it was subsequently amputated at the Miners' Hospital.

Passenger train No. 168, of the Lehigh Valley railroad, bound from Hazleton for Delano Saturday afternoon, narrowly escaped disaster near Audenried by striking a broken rail. Two cars left the track, but did not run far from it, and the train proceeded on its journey after a delay of half an hour. Several passengers were pretty well shaken up, but none sustained injury.

A man who was a passenger on the Lehigh Valley train bound from Mt. Carmel to Centra via yesterday afternoon made himself obnoxious to the passengers by indulging in a flood of foul language in the presence of ladies on the train. He gave the conductor a ten-dollar bill to pay fare to Centra via, and to get change the conductor was obliged to consult several passengers. This seemed to vex the man and when the change was given him he challenged the railroad man to step out on the Centra via depot platform to fight for another ten-dollar bill. Judging from the action of the passenger it was evidently his hope that the conductor would not be able to get change and there would be a free ride, but the conductor nipped the dodge.

Arraigned Sorcery. A week of revival service was opened in the Evangelical church, on West Cherry street, last evening. Rev. R. M. Lichtenwagner, the pastor, preached a sermon in which he condemned young people who patronize fortune tellers to find out whether they are to have black or red haired husbands, or wives, and married people who consult the sorcerers to ascertain whether their husbands and wives are true. He urged that such people consult the divine truth for consolation.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.

A Former Townsman Probably Fatally Injured at Mt. Carmel.

Robert Jones, a former resident of this place, and a prominent member of the Columbia Hose Company, accidentally received a pistol shot wound on Friday night at Mt. Carmel and may die from the effects. The bullet entered the abdomen and all efforts to trace it by probing have failed. The victim is at the home of his father, William Jones, who formerly kept a saloon in this town, and is now in the livery business at Mt. Carmel. The victim says the shooting was accidental. He exhibited a .32-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver to a friend named Jacob Bets, and while the latter was handling it the weapon was discharged.
