LA GASCOGNE'S WELCOME

New York's Entertaining Guest to the French Liner.

PASSENGERS WILDLY CHEERED

Thousands Crowd the Streets in the Vicinity of the Pier to Join in the Noisy Welcome—Captain Baudelon's Employees to Present Him with a Gold Medal.

New York, Feb. 13.—Long before the hour for the steamer La Gascoigne to pass every point of vantage along the North river was occupied. The roofs of all the pier sheds were black with people, and the battery was lined ten deep with spectators.

Meanwhile the throngs of people who were unable to secure positions on the water front marched along West street, keeping pace with the slow progress of the steamer, and gathering in numbers at every street corner, until by the time the foot of Morton street was reached there was a multitude that extended from east to west and surged against the gates of the French line pier in vain endeavor to gain admittance.

Notwithstanding that admission to the pier could only be obtained by those who had friends on board La Gascoigne and who had obtained passes from the company's office, the crowd grew in numbers every moment, and a squad of police under Sergeant Byrne and Sergeant Bush had the greatest difficulty in preventing the crowd that filled West street in front of the dock from forcing the gates and taking the pier by storm.

It was 11:15 o'clock when the big black hull ran alongside the end of the pier. The crowd gave wild cheers and began rushing out to get as near her as they could. But of course she was not to land there, and then the crowd surged and shifted back under the docked again. The tugs were pulling and pushing the big steamer about so as to run her into the slip. The gangways of the dock became jammed. There was very little space there anyway, owing to the large number of boxes which had been brought for loading on La Gascoigne last week.

The crowd clambered upon the boxes. Men helped women up. On the top of one of the highest piles of boxes stood two Paulist fathers waving their handkerchiefs.

As the steamer glided past the gang plank opening, her decks, which were crowded with people, presented a moving panorama of joyous, excited faces. At intervals the loud voiced crowd burst forth in wild cheers. Captain Baudelon was discovered standing serenely at his post on the bridge. A big man with a big voice on one of the goods boxes said: "Three cheers for that brave man." The cheers echoed against the shed roof, and the captain smiled.

At 11:45 the lines were made fast and the vessel became stationary. The crowd was so thick and so eager that at first the dock hands could not get at the gang plank. When at last they did lift it, they lifted a half dozen people with it.

Upon one of the goods boxes stood a man with a large camera. He was snapping the shutter as fast as he could put in plates. Down in the crowd there was an extra squad of police trying to keep the crowd quiet.

It was just 11:39 o'clock when the first passenger stepped down the gang plank and was seized by the wild, howling crowd. He was a young man dressed in a big fur trimmed overcoat. The next was a big man in a silk hat. His wife was in tears at the foot of the plank. The third was a young and pretty girl, and before she reached the bottom she was seized and madly kissed by a young man with a little mustache, while the crowd yelled with delight and gave more cheers.

A great many of the crowd tried to board the vessel. Passengers and stewards with traveling bags and steamer rugs and hat boxes were still coming down the gang plank. A great deal of confusion and one or two imprudent scuffles arose. The officers tried to restrain the crowd, and forbade their stepping on the gang plank. But they clambered over the goods boxes and jumped down on the plank from above, and thus stole their way on board despite the officials.

Suddenly there was a wild shout from a man near the gangway. "The captain, the captain, Captain Baudelon." Some one cried, "Hip Hip," everybody joining in the cheer. Some college boys gave a Princeton cheer; then a Yale one. Then Captain Baudelon came striding down the plank with his head uncovered, smiling and bowing from right to left. A woman threw him a large bunch of violets. He deftly caught it and held it to his face as he stepped down toward the crowd. Here he was seized by eager hands on all sides, and pulled this way and that. Every one tried to get one of his hands, the woman in the crowd being the more demonstrative in this respect. Three of them pushed their way toward him, and when he saw who they were he hastened toward them. They all kissed him at once. Harry Watson, the handsome bartender of the ship, was also hugged and kissed over and over again by several pretty women, who had been waiting at the pier since early morning.

The crowd cheered Watson, too. Outside the dock there was a long line of cabs and carriages, and as soon as the landing passengers could be hurried through they drove off. Considering the size of the crowd and the excitement in it the steamer and dock officials managed very well. It was a good natured crowd. Every one was excited, but every one was happy.

A Medal for Captain Baudelon. PARIS, Feb. 13.—The directors of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique have adopted a vote of congratulations to Captain Baudelon, of the steamer La Gascoigne. In addition they have decided to give him a gold medal in recognition of the skillful manner in which he handled his vessel on her last trip to New York.

To End Brooklyn's Trolley Strike.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 13.—As a result of a conference held yesterday afternoon between President Lewis and the board of directors of the Brooklyn City railroad and ex-Assemblyman John Graham and Police Justice Tighe, the trolley strike in Brooklyn, which was begun on Jan. 14 last, will probably be called off today. It is learned that President Lewis promised to take the strikers back, one by one, as they reported for work at the car stables. When vacancies occur by the dismissal of non-union men or on account of their leaving the old men will be put in their places, but it is expected that no new men will be discharged to make room for them.

MINNEAPOLIS' MYSTERY

The Testimony Against Harry Hayward Finished.

THE PURPOSE OF THE DEFENSE

It May be an Effort to Prove That Adry, and Not Harry, Conspired with Bixt to Murder Miss Ging—Adry's Alleged Jealousy.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 13.—Greatly increased crowds and many police officers appeared at the Hayward trial. Adry Hayward was on the stand for continued cross-examination. He was asked in regard to his conversation in the jail with Harry relative to their pressing Bixt relative.

"Don't you know there was nothing in the paper that day about Bixt?" asked Mr. Ervin. "No, I don't. I know he was reading the paper, I was not."

"On Oct. 7, 1898, were you not out of your mind?" "I can't say."

"Did you not curse and threaten to kill your father and mother?" "Well, I had some trouble over money. Harry came in, dragging father, and he lay down on the lounge. There was a shortage, but I explained it. Harry was trying to make the trouble."

Harry smiled at this point. "You know it is so. I accused Harry of stealing the money from my flat—mind, I don't say he did it, but I accused him then and there. Mother spoke up, and I told her that if she could not trust her sons why did she raise such a litter of pups. Then I got mad, and when Harry threatened to tip me up with a knife, I went to get my revolver and said I would kill Harry."

"You need not shake your head mother," cried the witness, noticing his mother. "That was the first trouble I had with my mother, and if it had not been for Harry I would never have had that trouble."

During the examination the witness said he did not blame Harry for trying to defend himself in the suit, but he did blame the family by letting itself be brought into disgrace by helping him out. He hated to testify against his brother, but he had some rights, and did not think he had to be dragged down on his brother's account.

"Were you not always jealous of your brother?" "No, sir."

"Did you not ever threaten your brother with violence?" "Once, when my brother said he could get me for $16 to send me to Stillwater, I said I knew enough to send him to Stillwater, and father was right there and heard it."

Witness then testified to going to Mr. Stewart, telling him his troubles. Adry was questioned at length regarding the shoes he wore on the night of the murder. These questions on the part of the defense indicate a possible purpose of setting up that it was Adry and not Harry who conspired to commit the murder with Bixt, and that the much talked of pointed shoe tracks at the scene of the murder were made by Adry.

The state has presented all its testimony and expects to be completely through by noon today. This afternoon the defense will present its side, and then the public will know just which one of the lines of defense has been decided upon. The state has fulfilled the promise made by Mr. Hall in the opening, and has proved on the stand all that it outlined to the jury.

It is a wonderful as well as an awful tale. It reads more improbable than any of the dramatic writings of the most sensational French novelists. It is almost past belief. Brother against brother, indeed, has it been for years in that family and now, perchance, it is a life for a life.

The mother of these two sons heard the attorney for the prisoner present the foundation for laying the crime at the door of her first born. In that crowd, not too fluidly stirred, not too tenderly constituted, there was at times a roar of horror. A crowd which had laughed gleefully at a proposition to tear a woman's head off with an elevator was transfixed with disgust at the proposition of sacrificing one on the altar of family preference.

During the afternoon several life insurance companies testified to conversations which Harry Hayward had with them in regard to the issuance of policies. Harry had asked if companies paid in cases of murder, and wanted to know if a company would pay if a person was burned in a building and the remains were so charred that they could not be recognized. This closed the testimony for the day, which was practically all the important testimony for the state, and paints the history of one of the blackest crimes. If the state's story is not broken by the defense, in the history of the world.
