OSCAR WILDE'S books are no worse since he met up with trouble than they were before. Oscar Wilde's books are no worse than the books written by some men no better than he, but who have merely been more fortunate in keeping out of jail.

The promised activity of trade which was to follow the enactment of the Gorman Tariff has been very slow in its movement, but according to the best Democratic authority the slaggard is now in sight.

It was predicted when the Chinese-Japanese war began that its effects would be very considerable in advancing the cause of Christianity in both empires. This prediction seems destined to a large fulfillment.

Those who have been looking for a reopening of the tariff and finance questions in the Fifty fourth Congress will be disappointed. No disturbance from either of those issues will be inflicted on the country in the next two years.

THE CAPTURE OF PERRY

The Noted Train Robber Again Behind the Bars.

HE TELLS OF HIS WANDERINGS.

The Fugitive Chuckles Over the Fact That He Was in New York City for Nearly Two Days, and Even Conversing with a Policeman.

WELLSBORO, N. J., April 17.—After five days and a few hours of dearly bought liberty Oliver Curtis Perry, the daring train robber, who escaped with four others from the Mattawan Insane asylum last Wednesday night, was captured yesterday, and is now a prisoner in the Hudson county jail awaiting a requisition for his removal to the New York institution.

OLIVER CURTIS PERRY.

Overtaken. When called by name he denied his identity, declaring that his name was John Martin. Soon after Chief Kelly arrived, however, he admitted that he was the much hunted fugitive.

He was taken before Justice Rier, who committed him to await requisition. A few minutes after he was sent away Keeper James Coyle, of the Mattawan asylum, arrived on a train from Newburgh, where he was on the hunt for Perry.

A short time after he had confessed to Chief Kelly the reporters were admitted to see Perry. The latter was brought out of his cell, and sat on the sill of a heavily barred window while he told his story.

"I reached the ground first, and as we had made no agreement as to what direction we would take I started to run. It was then 10 o'clock, and one of the outside guards called me to halt, and of course I did not. Then he asked the dog on me, but I knew too much for him, as I sicked the dog on another fellow who was running ahead of me.

"Now, look at me gentlemen," said he, appealingly, "look at the condition I am in. That's the only thing I am asking of. I could have got tools, money, clothing and a gun, but I preferred the disguise of a tramp and the hardships connected with it.

Perry would not tell anything of his movements in New York, except that he tramped around, but instead of answering the questions put to him in this respect he began to tell why he had made the escape, complaining that he had been abused at the asylum. Men, he said, were sometimes held down and jumped on and their ribs broken there.

Coming back to his story of New York, he said he left the city over the ferry next to Cortlandt street.

"That's the Jersey Central," said he. "This was on Monday morning. I walked to the yard, as I did not want to attract attention. A lady in Jersey City gave me this tie and two pairs of socks. I told her I was poor and a laborer. I walked along the railroad tracks for hours in the dark, and changed my clothes for the ones I am now wearing. When I came to the trestle near the coal cars I saw two fires burning, and I went up there. That was a fatal move on my part, for if I had not gone near the fires they never would have caught me."

He would not tell where or how he got his change of clothes, but he requested the reporters to come and see him at the asylum as soon as he would get back there.

Perry will be taken back to the asylum today. The other four convicts who escaped with Perry—Davis, McGuire, O'Donnell and Quigley—are in solitary confinement in the isolation ward. All have recovered from the exposures and privations that they suffered during the time they were at liberty.

Prepare for Spring

If you were about to journey to a warmer or colder climate you would make careful preparations. Besides taking a supply of warmer or cooler clothing, as the case might be, you would thoughtfully select a stock of medicines as safeguards to keep you in good health.
