STREWING FLOWERS.

Veterans and Others Observe Decoration Day in an Appropriate Manner.

MANY SOCIETIES ON PARADE

THE ROUTE LINED BY CITIZENS AND HUNDREDS OF PEOPLE FROM OTHER TOWNS.

Large Gatherings at the Cemeteries, Where the Graves Were Profusely Strewed With Flowers and the Closing Exercises Held.

It is certainly the wish of all honest and peace loving people in this country that feelings of political enmity, connected with the war, be entirely wiped out, and no better way to harmonize all past differences could be conceived than the general observance of Decoration Day. Each succeeding year finds the people more ready and more willing to strew flowers upon the sod which covers the bosoms of our fallen heroes. Shenandoah never saw a more attractive procession than that which marched to the cemetery this morning to do homage to the virtues of the soldiers who left their homes never to return, in order that this country might remain a nation for all time to come. It is pleasant to contemplate the fact that in our busy American life we can stop and give one day in each of the few fleeting years of our sojournment here to the remembrance of those who died fighting for their homes and for national liberty. The committee of Watkin Waters Post, Grand Army of the Republic, who attended to the details connected with a proper observance of Decoration Day, did their work well this year. They must have spent a great deal of their time in planning for so complete a realization of their hopes. The observance indicates that as a national holiday it still stands as prominently as any in the calendar. It is right that it should be so. All the colliers are idle and consequently the streets present a bright and animated appearance. The societies that responded favorably to the call for the parade were on hand at the appointed hour decorated with their many colored regalia and the procession moved in the following order:

Carriages, etc.

The procession moved in its entirety along East Oak, White, Coal, Jardin, West Oak, Chestnut, Cherry and Main streets, and then up to the cemetery and presented a handsome appearance. Watkin Waters Post turned out strong in proportion to the surviving members. The "vets" knew how to keep time while marching and the music from the bands no doubt stirred the blood in their veins, reviving memories of the days when they marched to the tune of "John Brown's body lies a mouldering in the grave." Several people in line carried fragrant flowers intended for those who sleep side by side, covered with scars, received on the battle field. The P. O. S. of A. and Jr. O. U. A. M. threw their colors to the breeze, and no doubt felt proud of the honor of participating in the ceremonies on such a hallowed occasion. The fire laddies looked handsome and fresh. The procession finally reached the I. O. O. F. cemetery, where the ceremonies incident to strewing the graves with flowers took place. The soldiers' monument was encircled by the spectators. Inside assembled those who were more immediately connected with the ceremonies.

Several members of the Post went forward and deposited wreaths of flowers on the soldiers' graves. The oration of the day was delivered by Rev. J. F. Meredith, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. Every word that fell from his lips was alive with the spirit of patriotism and was uttered in honor of those who were slain in freedom's battle.

NOTES ABOUT THE SCHOOLS.

An Incident That Caused Alarm at the West Street Building.
A panel of the stucco work on the front of the West street school building fell to the pavement and caused a report that greatly alarmed the teachers and pupils, but they soon became assured that nothing serious had happened and the school work went on. Fortunately no one was passing on the pavement at the time the fall occurred.

Under authority of Superintendent Whitaker all the public schools yesterday afternoon devoted half an hour after three o'clock to Memorial exercises, which consisted of singing of national anthems and literary exercises so selected as to give the pupils an idea of the object in observing Decoration Day. Marches and the display of the national colors also formed part of the exercises in some of the schools.

STILL UNVANQUISHED.

The Spartans Show the Students Tricks on the Diamond.
A very interesting game of base ball (overlooking the errors) was played at the Trotting park yesterday between the Spartans and the Students and the former were victorious. The Students are young men who have made a study of base ball at the various colleges of the country and have had the benefit of points from players who have led the Yale, Princeton, Harvard and such college teams to victory.

The Spartans are workmen who are busy every day earning their livelihood at desks, behind counters, at weigh scales and in other positions of arduous labor and have been obliged to glean what they know about the national game during the limited hours intervening between the expiration of their working time and nightfall. They have not had the advantages of college training which their opponents of yesterday enjoyed, yet they have successfully competed with all comers and remain the unvanquished champions.

The score was a close one and the Spartans had to hustle to retain their championship, but they say that had they deemed it necessary a different complexion could have been put on the game. There were times when they played quite yellow, more to spare the ambitious Students a humiliating defeat than anything else, and the champions say that if the brainy young again venture to assert their superiority they will be snuffed under.

The following was the score:
