A STRONG APPEAL.

The Commissioners to Circulate Petitions and Present the same to the Governor.

The Commissioners of this county will use every effort to induce the Governor not to approve the Quay County bill. That portion of Schuylkill county which is proposed to take to make up Quay county comprises the three Unions, Kann, Kline, Rush and Ryan townships. The loss of these townships, it is claimed, will "bring unnecessary burdens and inconveniences" upon the citizens of old Schuylkill and a strong appeal will be made to the people residing in the townships named above to oppose the dismemberment of their old county.

Petitions will be circulated in the townships named and the commissioners started out to-day to place the papers in the hands of the taxpayers for their signatures. The petition opens with greeting to Governor Hastings and reads as follows:

"We the undersigned citizens and taxpayers of that portion of Schuylkill county intended to be incorporated into a new county respectfully request you to veto bill known as the 'Quay County Bill' because if it becomes a law it would be detrimental to our interests, bring upon us unnecessary burdens and inconvenience in many respects."

The best and most reliable plumbing in town is done by P. W. Bell, the plumber, corner of Main and Centre streets. Satisfaction guaranteed. 6-4-ts

Tatterton Torn—"Did you travel incognito on your Western trip?" Bollingstone Nemo—"No; I traveled in freight."

A Show Worth Seeing.

Of the many circuses and menageries exhibiting throughout the Union, none has a more enviable record than Sands & Astley's Enormous New and Old World Railroad Shows, a monster consolidation of the most notable circuses and menagerie of America with the leading British circus, hippodrome, menagerie, museum and grand curio exhibition. There are no words but of praise wherever this model combination has exhibited, and its visit here, which will take place Monday, June 24, will be an important era in the amusement annals of our community.

Symbols of the "Cloud Fire."

Nearly all of the ancient nations called lightning by names signifying "cloud fire," and the major portion of them employed some symbol to represent the flash of the "forked fury" darting from the thunderclouds. The early Chaldeans symbolized it with a trident, and the Babylonians, learned in mystic lore, employed a human hand for the same purpose. The bas-reliefs of the towers of Nimrod and Mithra, which are the work of the bar and more refined Assyrian artists, show the trident doubled or transformed into what is known as a "trifid fascicle." This triumph of the classic art secured for the ancient Mesopotamian symbol the advantage over all other representations of the thunderbolt. The Greeks represented the "stem fire" with the feathers of a bird of prey. Later on, when they had begun to incorporate the Asiatic form of the symbol with their own, they put it in the claws of an eagle and made it the scepter of Zeus. Gaul received the symbol from Italy, but soon altered it to the familiar two-headed hammer or saron on the Gallo-Roman monuments. The same symbol is seen on amulets found in rmany, Scandinavia, England and France.—St. Louis Republic.

Economy and Artifice.

The Duchess of Buckingham, in her "Glimpses of Four Continents," tells an amusing Maori story belonging to the period when these natives were at war with England. All sorts of tricks went on, such as are not only fair, but commendable in war.

When the Maoris were in want of bullets, they used to show a dummy in the bush. Of course it was immediately fired at. A man in the background pulled it down by a string.

"Oh," thought the British soldiers, "we have done for him!"

"Up, bang!" went the British rifles. Down fell the dummy, and this went on till some worse marksman than usual cut the dummy's rope. No Maori would go up the tree to splice it, for that exposure meant certain death.

The bullets were all taken out of a little earth bank which the Maoris had made behind the trees where the dummy appeared and were used over again. It was a long time before this artifice was discovered.
