THOSE RESOLUTIONS.

The election of delegates to the state convention of the Republican party is still a subject of interest and the resolutions passed at the convention held here have caused considerable comment. The contest was so much Quoy and Hastings as it was Quoy and anti-Quoy, and it appears the fight was carried through on that line. The course of Senator Quoy while still in the lower house provoked the antagonism of leading Republicans throughout the district, so that the opposition he met within the ranks of his own party when he sought advancement to the Senate was unusually strong. But in spite of that Mr. Quoy, by an exhibition of pluck that was greatly admired, pulled through with the aid of the general stampede from the Democratic party which characterized the campaign of 1894, and no sooner was this accomplished than he commenced to get even with those who opposed him. In doing this he displayed an arrogant, dictatorial spirit which intensified the opposition to him, so that, taken in connection with his violation of pledges voluntarily given previous to his election and his interference in matters which should have been beneath the notice of a Senator, the representatives in convention administered him a scathing rebuke in withholding the resolutions commending his conduct which are usually given a representative and which were unanimously given in this case to Representative Wyatt.

We do not know whether Senator Quoy will feel the rebuke given or not, but it is to be hoped the lesson so disagreeably given will not be lost and that has by this time learned that he is the servant, not the master, and that it belongs to him to take to heart the disagreeable dose administered on Saturday last.

The absence of resolutions commending the Governor is also a notable fact. As near as we can learn this was an expression of feeling evoked by his vacillating course in matters pertaining to this district and his complete surrender to Senator Quoy in everything, even to the naming of Justices of the Peace. The claim made that because the First district did not instruct its delegates to vote for Senator Quoy that there is a doubt as to their action, is both in the extreme, as the sentiments of both are so pronounced that very material inducements to turn in for Mr. Gillespie were promptly declined, and they will be found voting to uphold the lands of the man whose magnificent organizing ability has brought the Republican party in Pennsylvania to the secure position it enjoys today, and not for the creature who has combined to assassinate him.

While the First district is but a small portion of Pennsylvania, its voters have the courage of their convictions, even to openly expressing their disapprobation of the official conduct of officers high in the councils of the state, who those officers prostitute their stations to unworthy ends.

Those two bright particular stars of the northern sky, Mr. Jas. Corbett and Mr. Robt. Fitzsimmons have distinguished themselves and obtained a lot of free advertising by an exclusive of billingsgate in Green's in Philadelphia.

As the Herald is given that should the League Valley Railroad Company, in case, should elect of English something else will take the place of the company's flag. There is a glimmer of hope in this, but it is indistinct.

The robbery occurred Friday last, but was not made public until yesterday in the hope of apprehending the thief. English and American Debt.

Is it merely a coincidence, we wonder, that connects the decrease of the national debt and the increase of local indebtedness? Since the Crimean war the national debt has been diminished by more than £100,000,000, while the local indebtedness in the same time has increased by nearly the same amount, and now stands £210,000,000, or something like 80 per cent of the national debt. The same peculiarity is seen in the United States. The Americans have wiped out a vast war debt with astonishing rapidity, but their local indebtedness has increased considerably faster than their national indebtedness has diminished. There is something intensely conservative and genial in human nature. You are apt to economize by giving up your stables, and two months later find yourself the proud possessor of a yacht; or one gives up champagne at dinner and soothes one's temperance with a glass of really fine cognac and a wonderful cigar.—Saturday Review.

Sympathy.

First Shopper—Why, Mrs. Tatting! What a stranger you are! Looking for bargains, I suppose? By the way, speaking of shopping, how mean it is for Mrs. Hamburg when she goes into a store to talk about her elegant establishment as if she intended to make the shopgirls discontented with their lot! Second Shopper—I know it! First Shopper—I never talk that way. I always take particular pains to say to the saleswomen that I should think they would die being shut up in a close store all day, especially when it is such lovely weather outside. I think it must make them feel ever so much better, and I am sure it does me no end of good.—Boston Transcript.

A Dainty For Dogs. The "plee de resistance" of an epileptic dog is horse hoof pating, as any blacksmith will explain. That is one reason that a passing dog likes to drop into a blacksmith shop. It is said also that the parings are healthful, and a Chicago fancier makes it his business to give his dogs a treat in this way once a week. Blacksmiths say that a visiting dog will always first pick out the parings of the "frog" and will leave out the harder portions till the last.—Chicago News.

Scientific Uses of Liquid Air. In a recent lecture on the scientific uses of liquid air Professor Dewar froze a soap bubble by means of the intense cold produced near the surface of liquid air. The same effect, however, was obtained by Mr. Pin by natural cold in Colorado last winter, when the thermometer stood at 14 degrees below zero F.—that is to say, at 92 degrees of frost. Acting on the suggestion of his little boy, who was blowing soap bubbles, he sent one into the cold air outside. It froze instantly and settled to the ground as a hollow shell of ice. When the thermometer rose to zero, the bubbles would not freeze, but whether this was owing to the change of temperature or some other condition of the air Mr. Pin is unable to say.—London Globe.

The dwellings were nearly all occupied by families of ill fame. A policeman and two firemen were slightly injured, but there were no fatalities.

That told the story.

And chronic cases of indigestion (dyspepsia or gastritis)—if it is all the same to you, develop a great variety of symptoms, and about this—poisoned by the products of his own fermentation, and inflamed stomach. His food, instead of being digested, and so furnishing strength and physical substance, ferments and poisons within him. The chief process of life is arrested at a vital point. The more he eats the worse off he is, and yet unless he can be fed he must also perish. Provide the so-called, daily, by thousands, but we doctors seldom have the moral courage to give the cause its true name, and we should be laughed at for our inability to cure so simple a thing as indigestion. Simply why? It is the cause of all our ailments—and the mother of most of them.—So writes a famous English physician.

The sufferer's friends often advise him to cheer up; to throw off his lethargy and eat freely. Bad advice. He knows better. "No," he answers, "I cannot my food does me no good." He is right. Food now is gold in the spent swimmer's belt.
