A DEFENSE OF RHODES.

Liberals Assail the British Chartered South African Company. A REPLY FROM MR. CHAMBERLAIN.

He Declares That But for Englishmen Like Rhodes English History Would be Much Follower and British Dominion Much Smaller—Labouchere's Denunciation.

LONDON, May 9.—The house of commons was crowded yesterday afternoon and the peers' gallery was packed, this gathering of interested people being due to the fact that the vote on the colonial estimates was to be taken, and that it was to be made the occasion of an important exchange of questions and answers upon South African affairs.

The Liberal leader, Sir William Harcourt, asked the government to make a statement regarding the raid into the Transvaal. In so doing he said that the opposition had heretofore not unduly pressed the government on this important matter, but they thought the time had now arrived for the house to be informed of the government's intention in the case. The responsible directors of the British Chartered South African company at Cape Town and Johannesburg were, he said, the authors of the raid, and Dr. Jameson was only their subordinate. The government, the speaker declared, was responsible for the acts of the Chartered company before the nation and the world.

Continuing, Sir William Harcourt remarked that the partisans of the company were trying to pass off on the credulity of the people that the raid was an impulsive action to protect the people of Johannesburg against outrage. But he could not think of anything more revolting than the low slang of the ephemerons, which showed the true aspect of the affair.

Sir William Harcourt then proceeded to analyze the telegrams exchanged between Cecil Rhodes, Colonel Rhodes, Bullerford Harris, Alfred Beit, Lionel Phillips, Dr. Jameson and others, just previous to the invasion of the territory of the South African republic.

Later the opposition leader eulogized the promptness, decision and courage of the secretary of state for the colonies, Joseph Chamberlain, and dwelt upon the course of the Chartered company, declaring that it compromised Great Britain's reputation.

Mr. Chamberlain, replying to Sir William Harcourt, said that while Cecil Rhodes' recent actions are universally condemned, his past services must not be forgotten. But for Englishmen like Rhodes English history would be much poorer and the British dominions would be much smaller. Both the English and the Africans of the Cape, continued Mr. Chamberlain, thought Cecil Rhodes the greatest benefactor the colony ever had. He was powerless in future to do mischief, as not an armed man could be moved without the authority of the government's own officers, and they were ready to give President Kruger any reasonable guarantee.

With the view of removing every shadow of suspicion, the government has refused to advise the Chartered company relative to Mr. Rhodes' resignation. But, in view of the disturbances in Rhodesia and the impossibility of finding out the opinion of the settlers, they thought it fair that the directors should be given time to consider the matter. They thought that Rhodes was in his proper place in South Africa, whether as a director or as a shareholder, and there he was best along with the past. After the judicial proceedings were ended the government, added Mr. Chamberlain, would review the situation in the light of information obtained.

Mr. Chamberlain further said that the government believed the proper course to follow would be that a joint committee of both houses should inquire into the whole situation, including the administration of the British Chartered South African company.

The policy of the government, he explained, was to prevent absolutely the recurrence of the regrettable proceedings, to continue by every legitimate means the efforts to secure a fair and equal treatment for British subjects in the Transvaal, and to restore amity between two races there.

Sir William Harcourt, added Mr. Chamberlain, had dealt with only one phase of the question. His speech was a powerful indictment not only of the Chartered company, but of the prisoners at Pretoria and the men undergoing trial in England. Many interests were at stake and developments were being anxiously and carefully watched by foreign nations. Under these circumstances there were many things which it was undesirable to mention at present and which might be said in the future. The speaker added:

"The object of our policy in South Africa is to preserve our position as the paramount state, and secondly to engender union and concord between the races there. The recent raid has jeopardized the first and has delayed the second. The prosperity and happiness of South Africa are dependent upon the realization of the same state of things we attained in Canada, where two races less closely allied than the English and the Dutch work, fight and live side by side in perfect peace and good will."

In conclusion, Mr. Chamberlain said that it had been suggested that the government should have issued an ultimatum to President Kruger. But such an ultimatum would certainly have been rejected, which would have led to war. Of course, he added, there might be contingencies in which a great power would have to face such an alternative. But he pointed out the government could not take military measures to force internal reforms in the Transvaal.

Mr. Labouchere, Radical member for Northampton, made a violent attack upon the British Chartered South African company. The entire press, he said, had conspired to blink at the real truth. The outspread of the situation was that they had a gang of gangsters and financiers, headed by Cecil Rhodes, who wished to rob the public. Mr. Labouchere charged Rhodes with lying to conceal his complicity with the invasion of the Transvaal, and with using his position to advance his personal and sordid interests. With incredible infamy, said the editor of Truth, he allowed his instrument, Dr. Jameson, to be tried when he himself was responsible.

FILIBUSTERS ON TRIAL.

Taking Testimony in the Case of the Schooner Competitor. URGING A SENTENCE OF DEATH.

Each of the Prisoners Declares That He Was Forced to Remain on Board the Vessel While There to Bid Good-by to Friends.

HAVANA, May 9.—The trial by court martial of the men captured on board the American schooner Competitor, of Key West, Fla., by the Spanish gunboat Mensajero, on April 23, began in the court of justice at the navy yard here yesterday. A grand of picked marine infantry soldiers brought in the prisoners.

The first to enter the court room was Alfredo Laborde, who is classed as the leader of the filibustering expedition.

After Laborde came Dr. Elias Bodla, a man named John Milton, said to be a native of Kansas; William Gildea, said to be a British subject, and Teodoro and Mata, described as fishermen and classed as witnesses.

Lieutenant Butron, in command of the gunboat Mensajero, who captured the Competitor, testified that when within hailing distance of the schooner he called upon her to show her colors. The schooner did not do so, and men on board of her jumped overboard and swam for the shore. Two of the latter were seen to go down and others may have been drowned. In addition two more of the so-called filibusters were killed by the rifle fire of the crew of the gunboat while trying to reach the shore.

Lieutenant Butron said he found on board the captured schooner, in addition to a quantity of war material, a number of documents, inscribed and classified, orders from Colonel Munson, an insurgent officer; recommendations from Estrada, the insurgent commander; to Collazo, another insurgent officer; proclamations signed by Laborde; lists of the members of the expedition and of the war material on board, and a permit for the Competitor to be used as a "lifboat."

Laborde, the alleged leader of the Competitor insurgents, was the first of the prisoners to be examined. Laborde testified that he was 39 years of age, and that he came from New Orleans. He said that he left Key West with twenty-four passengers, who, at Cape Sable, obliged him to put in towards the shore and forced him to take on board arms, ammunition and explosives, saying that they would transport this material to a steamer which would meet them at sea. Colonel Munson, Laborde added, landed on the coast of Cuba eventually, and he, Laborde, remained on board the Competitor. He did not fire on the Spanish gunboat, although the men on shore did so. When the prisoner was questioned regarding an insurgent flag which was found on board the schooner he said that it belonged to one of his passengers, a man named Quesada, who was among the drowned.

Dr. Elias Bodla testified that he was 27 years of age, and a medical student. He declared that he had repeatedly refused to take part in any expedition to Cuba, and that he merely went on board the schooner Competitor in order to say good-by to some friends. But, when the boat left, these friends refused to allow him to go ashore, and when they landed on the coast of Cuba he (Bodla) not being destructive of landing, remained on board the Competitor until he was captured and he was made a prisoner. He said that he did not hoist the national flag.

Teodoro Mata, the next prisoner, declared he went on board the Competitor in order to see the expedition leave, and that the men on board obliged him to go with them. He added that he did not land, and asserted that not one of the five prisoners in court fired a shot at the gunboat. Mata said that at Key West he was considered a spy of the Spanish government and he further claimed that he had fought with the Spaniards against the insurgents and was known to General Prats.

William Gildea declared that he was, like Mata, compelled by the others on board to accompany the expedition, although he had only gone to see them start, and for this reason, he added, he did not land. Gildea confirmed the statement that Quesada was drowned.

John Milton, the fifth prisoner, declared that he had also been compelled against his will to accompany the expedition, which he had gone to see start. He added that he believed Laborde, the commander of the schooner, was not aware that he was taking a party of filibusters until it was too late.

The prosecutor classed all the prisoners as traitors and as assisting in the insurrection. The schooner was classed as a pirate, worth about $4,000, and having on board an insurgent flag valued at one cent. He denied that Mata could be considered a friend of Spain, as he was treated on board the schooner in the same manner as the other members of the expedition. As to Laborde, the prosecutor pointed out that he was the man who had signed the proclamations found on board the schooner when she was captured.

In his defense Laborde firmly declared that he had not written or received the letters and other papers found on board, and that he had not signed the proclamations captured on board the schooner.

Lieutenant Butron, recalled, declared that the prisoners had not fired on the war vessel and asserted that no cartridges had been found in their pockets.

The prosecutor thereupon read the formal act of accusation, declaring the prisoners to be filibusters, and asked that the death sentence be imposed on all the prisoners.

Lieutenant Prats, for the defense, said that he did not consider the prisoners should be treated as being all equally guilty. He said that Laborde and Bodla were more guilty than Milton and Gildea, and that Milton was only guilty of excessive zeal in trying to obtain information.

Admiral Navarro approved of the death sentence being imposed.

Uncle Sam Watching the Trial. WASHINGTON, May 9.—The proceedings of the Spanish court-martial in the case of the men captured on the schooner Competitor are being closely followed here, and there is ground for the fear that unless the matter is handled with great discretion it may result in straining the present friendly and amicable relations between the United States and Spain. Strong representations have been made to the state department on this subject, and the department will certainly not fail to intervene instantly if it shall appear that at least all of the Americans among the captives under trial are not treated with all the privileges accorded by the rules of warfare. An instance on this point would oblige the department to refuse to sanction the execution of the Americans.
