Crawford then reached out for fame and fortune on the theatrical stage and also on the lecture platform. At the same time he issued his books of poems and for a while he was quite successful. He went to England, where his fame as a scout and frontier poet had preceded him and his drawog room recitals became the rage. Returning to America Crawford wrote a frontier play entitled, "On the Trail." It had poetle merit, but was not a success. A performance was given in this town with no better encouragement and Crawford and his large company stranded here. J. J. Francy advanced money to get the company back to New York. This was but a return for an act of kindness Mr. Francy received from him. At the time of the great conflagration in this town in November, 1883, Francy became pressed for money. Among his old accounts was one of $6 due from Crawford. Francy forwarded the bill to the west and Crawford sponded with a remittance of $10 and the following poem:
