The train that can into the engine was passenger No. 20 due here at 7,52 and in charge of John Reeves, conductor, and Engineer William Gouldner. The freight engine was No. 438 in charge of a Hardeton gree, Edward haker, conductor, and fourge streeting the property of the contraction.

Stanfenberg, engineer.
The freight engine was shifting in the yard when the passenger teals was due and pulled out of the siding as the train approache. The enabl took place about ten or fiftee parels from the switch of the siding. Had would have been thrown over an endanment and many people would have here seriously injured, if not killed,

The two engines came together with such force the freight engine was forced backward under a freight ear and four freight cars were pushed off the track. The pilot of the passenger engine was crushed, but the train slid not suffer otherwise.

Many of the passengers were severely was inevitable and he jumped from the train dealer in the county at, and sprained his right ankle

Edward Warren, one of the Hazleton crew, bad a narrow escape from being crushed to death. A moment before the enash he stood between two freight cars prepared to un-couple them and heard the shouts of a fellow brakeman in time to jump from his perilous position to a place of safety.
