Joe-says it was good money, and it took him an hour to count it. When it had been wrapped up in a package he put it under his arm, but had it down to enroll his name in a large book. Upon going to his hotel he locked the door and proceeded to look at his fortune, but found content tank. Its almost want but found instead trash. He almost went mad for his deceiver had flown.

After returning home a friend of his in hamokin received similar letters from the same party. Joe. impersonated his friend and met the green goods people, but not before shaving his beard. At Bridgeport, Conn., he met the same man who swindled him. In a room at the hotel, while the swindler was opening the box containing $15,000, he felled him and kicked him insensible and Jos placed the money in the bosom of his shirt.

Then the door opened and three men entered and a free fight ensued. The police arved, but all escaped but the fellow who was kicked by Joe. The police took the money from him and he has entered suit to recover it, the trial to come up the first week in Jan ery, with New York attorneys in charge of scase. He spent two weeks in prison during which time he received 5,000 cigars from visitors to see the man who "routed the green goods men.
