Getting Near Home.
 Burglars last night made an unsuccessful attempt to rob the residence of Councilman D. B. James, on South Jervis street. They succeeded in forcing open a window with a bar at the rear of the house, but allowed it to slip and the noise made by the drop awakened Mr. James, who jumped out of the bed and yelled "Free Silver!" That was enough. The burglars took to their heels and left the Councilman in the enjoyment of his home. Mr. James says there is nothing in his house for burglars to get except the contents of a revolver, which he had in hand last night but did not get a chance to use it.

 The universal cure for coughs and colds. At Grolier Bros., drug store.

Last Night's Play.
 The appearance of Ethel B. Spencer, the gifted young Impetuous, and her excellent company, at Ferguson's Theatre last evening, was worthy of a larger attendance than that accorded him. The play last night was "Julius Caesar," and Mr. Spencer's portrayal of the dictator of "Caesar" was the finest seen on the local stage. His reading of the lines was scholarly and forcible. His support was excellent. Frank Hennings, as "Mark Antony," and George Mosser, as "Brutus," played their respective parts with such admirable taste and ability that the audience for the time being forgot there was a play on the stage.
