Debort Browning.

Of Robert Browning. Doan Farrar says in The Independent that the poet was the most considered to know something about everything. "I believe," adds the dean, that when he was writing Sericito he exhausted every book in the itsilian poet. The securacy with which he mastered even the most reconsider alligators to his subjects before he found them. he fused them together in the crucible of his imagination was most remarksof his imagination was most remarka-ble. The instancy, two, was very re-tentive. He once reposted to me a great part of the peem of near George Smart on David, which he regarded as reaching a very high needle level. But he had read everything from Bushe-quite to held,—for whom he told me he had a very high admiration, when I had queted to him some lines from his dramas. This assurany was extended to the impurest and most apparently resignificant dentits. In Florence it is gested to him his longest, and in some respects most remarkable poem. The Ring and the Book."
