In course of time this waste of chestum coal ceased and the demand for that size became almost as strong as that for store coal 20. and in fact thousands of tons of the broken and lump coal sizes were used exclusively for steam purposes at: manufacturing establishments in the Eastern and Middle States. Later the cheaper bituminous coal wrested the trade of manufacturers from the anthracite operators and anthracite became gradually known as a domestic confor which it is peculiarly fitted. This resulted in less demand for hump and broken coal, and made necessary the production of larger proportions of egg, store and elestant. The creased the proportion of pen bucks wheat and rice coal. In more recent cears improved appliances have made it possible to secure most excellent re- Ph. the smaller sizes of anthracite, or from the Fixth district. those below chestant in size. Owing

The anthracite-carrying roads contend that they are carrying coal to market as cheaply as they can afford to. This statement may be true as far as the large sizes are concerned because the demand is not constant enough to keep their cars continually in service and thus give them a regular tonnage.

There is nothing to be gained by the statement that the authracite production is not restricted. It is restricted, and rightfully so. Without restriction the market for domestic sizes would be flooded, prices would break, bankruptey would be the fate of the operator and starvation that of the miner; but, the restriction that wisely controls the production of domestic sizes should not be so closely applied to the small sizes. These small sizes should not becounted in the apportionment. They have very little, if any, bearing on the state of the market for the the same advantages of regular In hathousands of forms is the most tardomestic sizes, and they should have supply to consumers, as bituminous coal. If this is done many manufacturers now using bituminous weal, because they can get regular supplies of it, would speedlly turn to the small sizes of anthracity. Operators of anthracite mines would be benefited and the milroad companies would certainly gain, as it is better for them to employ their ears in the PISO'S CURE FOR & transportation of small sizes of anthracite than to have them lying idle during a considerable portion of each
